Joyous Song, Bright Lights Open 1963 Xmas Festival

Many persons from all sections of New England attended the formal opening at the City Hall Plaza of the 14th annual City of Boston Christmas Festival, at 4 P.M., last Friday.

An even larger number was present at the Common that night when Mayor John F. Collins unveiled the City's heroic-sized crèche and switches on the 30,000 lights that will illuminate the Festival displays nightly this year.

From all present indications the nationally famed Festival spectacle at the Common this year will exceed in beauty and grandeur that of any previous year, says Festival Director Paul Hines. The music also, he says, will reach new heights in both quantity and quality.

Among the outstanding features of the Festival this year will be the miniature Toyland to be erected at Playland, Boston Common. Here the children will not only view more toys than they have ever seen at any one spot, but they will have an opportunity to see Santa's workshop with his tireless workers, and also get a close-up of his eight tiny reindeer. Keeping these animals company during the Festival will be four handsome dwarfed Sicilian ponies, a flock of sheep and even a real live camel.

At the opening ceremonies at the City Hall Plaza, Mayor Collins lit one of the four candles in the City's Advent wreath installed over the entrance to the Hall. Preceding the lighting of the candle, a chorus of several thousand public school children presented a unique vocal and instrumental program of old and new world Christmas hymns and carols. Joseph A. Trongone, music director of the public school system, conducted.

Of special interest to the visitors to the Common this year will be the new look given all of the crèche and other religious figures that go to make up the magnificent series of tableaux that are annually displayed at the Common during the Festival. All of the figures have been redecorated in the latest ecclesiastical colors.

The lights to be used to illuminate the Festival display at the Common this year should also exceed in beauty those of previous years. They will contain every color in the rainbow.

Hoover Deplores Soft Attitude on Murderers

J. Edgar Hoover, FBI director, continued to express concern over a pronounced drift toward a "do-good" attitude for those responsible for "crime, filth and corruption" last week.

In an address before the 7th National Catholic Youth Conference in New York, the top law enforcement officer of the nation deplored the growing success of "civil righters" and "do-gooders" to imbalance the scales of justice in favor of the hoodlum and the law breaker.

Hoover said that "In 1957, a federal judge in the nation's capital assailed what he considered to be 'an unfortunate trend of judicial decisions . . . which strain and stretch to give the guilty, not the same but vastly more protection than the law-abiding citizen.'

"There has been no reversal of this alarming trend," Hoover said.

He also called for a "more realistic attitude" toward punishment and rehabilitation of criminals.

"We have tried the charitable approach toward young hoodlums and it has failed," he said.

"Crime," he said, "has increased nearly 40 per cent in the past six years."

Old Corner's Pizza Days Are Over With No Regrets—Now for Restoration

By ED DROHAN

It was August. It was noon. It was hot.

I was standing at School and Washington Streets. I figured if I ever got across the street and down into that subway, I'd sit until three trains went by. You could get cool that way.

This family came to the corner. They were fresh, cool, crisp. Mother was efficient. She seemed to be running the party. Daddy had all kinds of camera equipment strung around his neck. The leather straps were nice and shiny. There were two girls—both blondes. Maybe one was 14. The other was about 12. The boy was 9. He was having trouble with a five-and-ten-cent space gun. The trigger didn't seem to work.

The handbags the little girls carried had little paper pennants pasted on them. The pennants said—"Huskerville, Nebraska." They were pretty.

"Now this should be the Old Corner Book Store," said mother. She consulted her reef of Freedom Trail literature and maps.

Daddy backed up to the curb trying to get a focus with one of his new cameras. "C'mon, kids," he said, "line up."

"But daddy," said the older daughter, "this just looks like those cheap restaurants we saw in Dayton."

The younger daughter studied the bronze tablet. "It says, 'Old Corner Book Store' right here, see mother."

Mother looked distressed. Daddy looked disgusted. The little girls studied the bronze tablet. The little boy banged his space gun against the brick wall. Still it didn't work. Then everybody went back to the maps. Daddy pushed all the literature aside. He was a man of action.

"Is this the 'Old Corner Book Store'?" he asked a passerby in his best Nebraskan man-of-the-world approach.

"Naw," replied the heat-harried pedestrian, "that ain't no book store—itza pizza joint—cantcha see?"

The little Nebraskan delegation finally crossed the street to the cool and hallowed Old South Meeting House. We ducked down into the tunnel. We forgot to let a couple of trains go by.

We were thinking what a wonderful idea it was for the Globe to take over that corner and help restore it to the sort of place it was when Emerson, Whittier and the rest of that crowd came to town to see "What's new in books?"

We hope that nice family from Nebraska can stretch the budget a cupla years hence and come back again. The New Boston will be here then. The original "Old Corner Book Store" won't be a "pizza joint."

And that guy with the space gun will not be going back to Nebraska and telling his pals "only thing I liked about Boston were those cannons they had on Old Ironsides."

COMING RIGHT ALONG — A view of the progress being made in the construction of the new Municipal Auditorium at the Prudential Center. Keeping pace nearby is the new $27 million Hotel America.

Mayor Collins Tells Big Western Audience, "People Make True Image"

(Before an enthusiastic audience attending the 65th annual State conference of the League of Iowa municipalities, Mayor John F. Collins, as president of the American Municipal Association, delivered one of the principal addresses. Delegates to the big convention wanted to know how Boston had leaped out of the "also-ran" class into front-running, pace-making position among American cities. Here's the Mayor's address.)

Webster's unabridged dictionary devotes half a column of extremely fine type to define the word "image." Madison Avenue would need tons of slick paper and the services of the most gifted artists, engravers, lithographers and writers to accomplish the same thing.

That is quite a tribute to a simple five-letter word.

Yet, I see no reason for making it such a complicated bit of nomenclature.

By the non-difficult act of looking into a mirror we can obtain an image of ourselves. At the same time we can see ourselves as others see us. There's nothing mystic about it.

Of course, we can try to fool ourselves by buttoning a coat over a stained necktie or by assuming a smile that places a strain on unwilling, uncooperative facial muscles. We don't deceive ourselves. Most certainly, we don't fool others.

The mirror is more flattering when the cravat is fresh and sharp. The mirror is much more kind when the smile is unforced and really inspired.

Today, we live in an extremely competitive world. It is a world dedicated to progress—a world in which that natural by-product of competition often turns out to be jealousy.

On the other hand, here in the United States it is a world quick to recognize true achievement, honestly sought and honestly gained.

All of us gathered today share a common concern. That is the betterment, the progress, the material and spiritual advance of our cities.

We all realize that our cities have an image quite as vivid, quite as distinct and quite as real as that of the individual.

"I'm From Boston"

Just a few months ago, Boston was awarded All-America distinction by the National Municipal League and the widely circulated Look Magazine. To me and to Boston that was something more than a token recognition of what had been going on in my city.

It is one of many easily recognized signs that we are accomplishing something that too many individuals and too many municipalities are too prone to accept as impossible.

You Can't Stand Still

We are changing our image.

I am a Bostonian. I had no choice in the place of my birth. If I did, Boston would still be my choice. I know its people. I know their capacity. I know Boston's tremendous resources—from the wealth and depth of its historical roots to the eminence of its place as one of the world's great medical centers—from its strategic geographical and economical position in the Northeast to its standing as a great college and university center.

Yet, I know that a few years back Boston was not a City-on-the-Go. It was no secret. Perhaps, unconsciously, it had become a city willing to rest on its oar—a city willing to stand still.

But in today's world you cannot rest on the glories of the manifest achievements of the past. Above all you CANNOT STAND STILL. Either you move forward or you retrogress.

Today Boston is not a city "STANDING STILL". We have completely erased that picture. We are building! We are becoming a great and beautiful city. We are reasserting claim to our justly proud birthright as a great American city.

Today our image is one for which there is no need of apology.

Not By Mirrors

How has it been done?

Certainly, not by mirrors. Most certainly, not by accident. Most certainly, not by wishful thinking.

By work? Yes, by very hard work. By planning? Yes, by the most careful planning. By determination? Yes, by solid, unwavering determination.

However, beyond hard work, beyond careful planning, beyond a driving determination—there was another far more basic, far more important factor.

That Factor Was Our People.

They wanted a change of our image. They wanted an end to the same-old-things—done in the same-old-way. They wanted a realization of the potential that has existed in our city from the time our nation was born.

That was true on every level of our population—from those being swallowed in the advance of municipal decay—to those who abhorred our failure to assume our proper place as a strong and vital economic center.

Once given the chance to express their will—they did so in no uncertain terms. They have proved that given proper leadership and proper guidance into which their desires and will can be channeled—success can be achieved.

The image of any city is the image of its people—just as the true image of any great nation has always been the image of its people.

If the image is distorted it is because the people have not been allowed to express their wishes.

The United States will remain one of the great nations of the world just as long as the people themselves dictate their wishes.

Once their wishes are carried out—the image takes care of itself.

Modern Wheel Must Serve, Not Control Man, Mayor Tells Traffic Conferama

(Following is Mayor John F. Collins' address opening the eighth Boston Municipal Employees Conferama. Subject this year was "The Megalopolis—Traffic and Transportation Problems.")

We are told man's first major invention was the wheel.

Our anthropologists can't measure the degree of satisfaction he must have known when he found the wheel offered a quick and simple solution to many of his immediate problems.

If the limits of his world were set by the horizons, it's doubtful that he tinkered with the idea of fitting his round stone with rubber, attaching something that would give it motor power and setting off to see what was on the other side of those horizons.

Chances are, in the beginning, that he was content to get one big rock from one place to another—to make other wheels or even to build a shelter. If the temptation to see what was on the other side of the horizons overcame him—he preferred to walk.

He had no way of knowing that the wheel he fashioned so laboriously would roll down the corridor of time. There was no way he could foresee that the same invention which solved so many of his daily problems would produce titanic headaches for his descendants.

During the next two days you will be participating in and listening to discussions concerned with the many facets of traffic and transportation problems which buffet our modern civilization.

Many of your distinguished speakers have devoted a good part of their lives to a study of those problems.

Permit me to congratulate you on the thoroughness of your program—and on the broad base of concentrated exploration that it permits.

It is not enough to admit to ourselves that our city has its share of these problems. No large city in the nation is without the burden. Indeed, no large municipality in the world is not heavily beset.

The wheel has brought many blessings to man and his civilization. Without it his horizons would be limited. His civilization, indeed, would never have risen from its prehistoric beginnings.

Swift, safe, convenient transportation—transportation of the individual, transportation of the masses—is a prime need of our modern world.

Yet, as we advance with the passing of every year in providing ourselves with the means of that transportation, we must recognize that without thought, without shrewd down-to-earth planning we may well be fabricating the strangulation of our cities.

And even beyond that, all of us must find the answer—indeed, we MUST find the means to end the senseless human slaughter on the highways.

In your valuable deliberations of the next two days no perfect nostrums will suddenly be uncovered to bring quick answers.

However, from meetings such as this—from deep studies such as will be reflected in laboratory investigations such as these—we can—and eventually we will gain mastery over the wheel.

Man did not invent it to destroy himself.

He intended it as a tool to serve him.

To each and everyone participating in this the eighth of our Conferamas I extend my felicitations and my most earnest wish for a successful, productive, and satisfying program.

Hignett Is America's Convention Manager

Appointment of Franklin B. Hignett to the post of convention services manager of the 1,000-room Hotel America being erected in Boston's Prudential Center, was announced by Vice President Paul Sonnabend of Hotel Corporation of America's hotel division.

The new $27 million hotel, scheduled to open in early 1965, will be operated by Boston-based Hotel Corporation of America, international firm of eminent hotels and Charter House motor hotels.

Hignett moves into this new convention position from executive assistant manager of Hotel Kenmore in Boston, also operated by Hotel Corporation of America.

As convention services manager, Hignett will coordinate details of groups convening in the new hotel. The new Hotel America makes possible for many large national and international organizations to meet in Boston which previously could not be accommodated because of inadequate convention facilities.

With the new Hotel America and the adjoining Municipal Auditorium, Boston can compete with such major cities as New York, Chicago and Los Angeles for conventions.

According to Joseph W. McCarthy, sales manager for new Hotel America, more than $40 million of convention business has been either firmed or tentatively booked for the city as a result of the new hotel. In many of the months through 1968 the hotel is already booked to capacity. Convention meetings have been set for the hotel into 1973.

Foley Cites Dec. 31 Comp. Plan Deadline

Personnel Supervisor Duncan T. Foley of the Administrative Services Department sent the following advisory notice to all county department heads Nov. 13:

Effective as of March 6, 1963, a new Compensation Plan for Officers and Employees of Suffolk County was established.

Rule 16 of this new plan provides for transition to this new plan from the pre-existing plan.

An employee for whose position a different title was proposed has the right to accept or decline the new title; but this right will lapse on December 31, 1963, when the current salary appropriation lapses. Accordingly, ANY NEW TITLE NOT ACCEPTED BY DECEMBER 31, 1963, WILL BE DEEMED TO HAVE BEEN DECLINED.

If an employee declines to accept the new title and if the title of his present position is not included in Schedule B (List of Positions) of the new plan, he remains under the provisions of the pre-existing (now obsolescent) plan.

Plenty of Man-Hours Required To Create Great Boston Festival

By PAUL HINES

The annual production of the City of Boston Christmas Festival represents a lot of work by a lot of people. The fourteenth such event opened last Friday and will run through the Feast of the Epiphany on January 6.

Months before the Festival begins each year, an inspection is started of the physical condition of each of the 30,000 stringers and sockets that are used to illuminate the Common during the Christmas display and all of the more than 200 religious figures and tableaux that are the theme of the Festival are carefully examined.

Annually, because of the severe wear and tear imposed by the elements on both the electrical equipment and religious figures, repairs and replacements are frequently necessary. This year a number of 13-year-old religious figures were replaced and large sections of the more than 12 miles of cable and electrical wire were repaired or replaced.

For weeks during the past summer and fall five experienced artists at the Tirone Studio in Boston, where all of the figures are made, were engaged on a full-time basis repainting and repairing more than 200 of the figures, all in novel, ecclesiastical colors. When they are presented this week they will look like new.

Miles of Wiring

Electrical contractors have also been engaged for more than a month diligently repairing all defective electrical equipment and making replacements where needed.

The Festival places a heavy work burden on many Park Department carpenters and other technicians from early fall up to and during the Festival itself. Not only do they erect all of the props, but they lend their services to the electrical contractors and other experts in laying cables and maintaining them throughout the six weeks of the event. All of the electrical installation is made under the supervision of Charles McCabe, chief of the Public Works Department electrical division. Park Commissioner Martin Walsb supervises the erection of the other props.

All of the organization work and promotion is done at the Christmas Festival headquarters under the sponsorship of Mayor John F. Collins.

Most of the money that pays for the expense of the Festival is raised by a committee of 40 or 50 prominent businessmen representing about every line of endeavor.

Seaport of Boston Now Ninth in Foreign Trade

Total waterborne foreign trade at the Seaport of Boston has an annual valuation of $580 million, according to Executive Director Edward J. King.

King claims Boston ranks ninth among the ports of the country in total foreign trade.

Since Boston's advantages as a seaport are preponderantly on the import side, King said, imports account for more than $450 million of the total. Boston ranks fifth in imports and 17th in exports.

Among reasons for the imbalance, Mr. King enumerated Boston's outstanding advantage in being first port of call for one in five general cargo ships touching at United States North Atlantic ports. In addition, he said, New England lacks the heavy cargo of agriculture and primary industry, and—until late last month—was handicapped by unfavorable rail rates.

Later that month, King recently told the International Trade Association at Boston that transportation is in the era of "the Overnight Delivery."

"Only a few decades ago, overnight delivery was limited to New England," said King. "Gradually overnight service reached New York and then the Midwest. Today overnight delivery from Boston reaches to the West Coast or to London and Paris.

"This new range for the products of New England means much to the economic potential of this area."

Richard P. Chapman, president of the New England Merchants National Bank, is chairman of this year's Finance Committee.

Began in 1950

The Festival budget this year is approximately $32,500 of which $25,000 will be donated by leading banks, insurance companies, newspapers, radio and TV stations and a handful of merchants. The city appropriation will not be in excess of $7,500.

Although the Festival was started in 1950 solely to give the community a spiritual uplift, it has proved to be a boon for all Boston business. It is estimated that more than a million persons came here last year from all sections of New England to view the Festival. An even larger number is expected this year as the fame of the Festival is steadily increasing throughout the nation.

New Toyland

A unique feature this year will be a miniature "Toyland" to be erected at Playland, Boston Common. Here the children will not only see Santa's workshop and his eight white reindeer, but also hundreds of a wide variety of toys, many of them animated. Four Sicilian donkeys, a flock of sheep, and even a camel will join the deer at the menagerie.

The musical program held daily at the Common during the Festival is expected to exceed in size and quality that of previous years. More than 100 Greater Boston church choirs, school glee clubs, and instrumental groups are expected to present concerts at the Christmas Chapel at the Common this year.

The concerts will be held daily at 12:30 to 1:30; 4:30 to 5:30, and in the evening from 7:30 to 8:30, often longer. The Sunday programs will be presented at 2:00 to 4:00 and 7:00 to 9:00.

The officials of this year's Festival are: Mayor Collins, general chairman; Richard P. Chapman, chairman of Finance; Arthur F. F. Snyder, assistant finance chairman; Ralph M. Binney, treasurer, and Paul Hines, Festival Director.

BHA, CORE, NAACP Reach Pact on Housing Policy

On November 15 a joint agreement was signed by the BHA, NAACP and CORE at the office of the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination.

A joint statement of the three agencies read as follows:

The agreement signed by the Boston Housing Authority, the NAACP, and CORE is the result of joint efforts in many sessions devoted to developing a responsible and effective approach to the achievement and maintenance of integrated occupancy in public housing developments.

The detailed procedures included in the agreement have been painstakingly conceived to provide maximum assurances to the community that public housing is available on a non-discriminatory basis.

On June 19, the Authority adopted and released a general statement of policy on tenancy in public housing. The agreement describes the system to be installed to fulfill the policy.

The Authority will use the services of an Advisory Committee that has been created to advise on the many complicated problems involved in the tenancy of public housing. The members of the Committee are: Judge Charles J. Artesani, Rev. Joseph Barth, Mrs. O'Ray Edwards, Emanuel Goldberg, Rt. Reverend Edmund F. Hackett, Nicholas P. Morrissey, Dr. Charles A. Pinderhughes, Joseph Turley and Rev. Nathaniel Wright.

The agreement provides that the Housing Authority will develop three and six-month projections of occupancy patterns in public housing which will serve as targets for accomplishment and as a basis for review of the program.

Throughout the preparation of the agreement the representatives of the BHA, the NAACP, and CORE have been assisted by other interested agency and community leaders. The Massachusetts Commission against Discrimination, particularly through Commissioner Ben

Luxury Liner "France" Calls Here Next Fall

The new French luxury liner "France" will call at Commonwealth Pier, Boston on October 2, 1964 following conversations between French Line officials and Maritime representatives of the Massachusetts Port Authority.

The 1,035-foot vessel will require the exclusive use of one side of the large pier, which itself measures 1,200 feet in length. The Boston

Shapiro, has been most helpful. Rev. Robert F. Drinan, S.J., dean of the Boston College Law School and chairman of the Mayor's Committee on Minority Group Housing, has been an active participant.

It was noted that this agreement represents the constructive results of serious negotiations between responsible civil rights groups and a public agency. Spokesmen for NAACP and CORE praised the forward-looking step taken by the BHA and its staff, and pointed to it as a creative response to the need of the community as a model of conscientious action on the part of public officials.

sailing will call at Southampton and Le Havre. Port Authority officials were prompted to seek a scheduled Boston sailing for the vessel after hundreds of New England passengers were required to travel to New York this past season to make connections with her.

Capacity of the liner is 1,100 passengers. She is air conditioned and, as an innovation, provides a large club for teenagers, complete with soda bar, juke box, dance floor, bowling alleys, and a shooting gallery.

Winston Churchill's humor is not the polished variety; it smacks much more of the music hall. In 1939 when he was serving as First Lord of the Admiralty he told with relish how a destroyer had dropped a depth charge, but instead of finding a submarine, bits of an old wreck had come to the surface.

"And would you believe it," he added with a grin, "there was a door bobbing around with my initials on it! I wanted to recount this important occurrence in a speech, but Mr. Chamberlain cut it out—he thinks my taste is questionable."

Carty Tops Balloting In B.E.C.U. Election

Paul Carty of the Retirement Board topped the list of candidates for the three-year term as a member of the Board of Directors of the City of Boston Employees Credit Union at the election November 19.

The successful candidates and the votes they polled were as follows:

New $5.5 Million B.U. Library on Charles

Boston University announces plans for construction of a new $5.5 million ultra-modern library structure on the University's Charles River campus.

The undertaking was termed by President Harold C. Case "the largest and most important single undertaking ever embarked upon by the University."

Generations of B. U. students have been forced to make extensive use of the Boston Public Library in lieu of adequate university facilities.

The new structure will be six stories and will be located between the new Sharman Union and the high-rise law education building now nearing completion on the shores of the Charles River.

Group Insurance Plan Reopened Until Dec. 15

Administrative Services Director Henry A. Scagnoli issued the following directive to all department heads November 15:

Please advise all employees of the re-opening of our Group-Health Insurance Program between the dates of November 20th and December 15th, 1963.

Those employees who did not take advantage of their initial opportunity to enroll may now enroll in the plan by submitting medical evidence of insurability.

Enrollment forms will be available from payroll clerks and will indicate specific instructions for enrollment at this time.

Any questions on this matter may be directed to the Group Insurance Office, Room 52, City Hall—LA 3-5100—Ext. 208.

Carty, 589; William J. Coughlin, Auditing, 542; Catherine C. O'Hare, Welfare, 487; Joseph Fellows, School Department, 476; James F. Johnson, P.W.D., 472; Francis E. Guiney, Long Island Hospital, 465; Patrick Loftus, Real Property, 391.

Carty, Fellows, and Loftus were reelected to membership on the board. Harold T. Kenney, Auditing, was unopposed for the one-year term.

All amendments proposed by the Board of Directors to existing bylaws were approved.

Three-Way Correction

Arthur Siegel of the Globe, who has been one of our favorite sports columnists since 'way back in B. C.'s Bowl days, rapped our knuckles hard the other day. Pointed out that in a little CR story telling of the wonderful work of ex-boxer Walter Byar among youngsters we erroneously accredited him with a ring victory over Irish Bob Murphy.

The Bob Murphy Walter licked was Brighton Bob Murphy.

What Arthur missed was that just a week later—the gremlins were still working in the type. A caption went haywire. Billy Woods, as nice a little boxer as ever worked the ring, came out as Billy Hill or something.

Abject apologies are in order to a grand guy and a grand columnist Arthur Siegel; to the gentlemanly Walter Byar and to Billy Woods who said, "I'll forgive you if you get me the picture—I want to show it to my wife."

No Credit Card?

A friend of ours, who has just returned from Paris, says he dropped into a sidewalk café late one night and, after a couple of drinks, he realized he was the last person in the bar except for a chap sleeping at one of the tables.

Our friend called the proprietor over and asked for his bill.

"Would monsieur care for another drink?" asked the Frenchman.

"No, thanks, I imagine you want to close up. Why don't you send that other fellow home?"

"Well, I should," said the other. Then, with Gallic logic, he added, "But each time I wake him up he asks for the bill and pays it again."

Edward J. McCormack

Edward J. (Knocko) McCormack, for several decades one of the best known figures in Boston, died November 16 at Veterans Hospital, Jamaica Plain. He was 67. His home was at 1828 Columbia road, South Boston.

He was the brother of Speaker John W. McCormack of the national House of Representatives, and father of former state Attorney General Edward J. McCormack, Jr.

He also leaves his wife, the former Mary T. Coffey, another son, John W. and another brother, Daniel, of Texas.

He was a member of the old Ninth Regiment and served overseas in World War I with the famed 26th Yankee Division. In 1949 he was elected national commander of the YD Veterans Association.

Widely attended funeral services were held November 20, with a Solemn Requiem Mass at St. Bridget's Church, South Boston.

VII. HIGH COMMENDATION

At 5.40 A.M., Saturday, October 19, 1963, the department responded to an alarm from Box 344, 3 alarms, for a fire in a large three-story wooden frame building, occupied as a rooming house at 538-540 Talbot avenue, Dorchester.

Upon arrival of the apparatus, the top floor of the building was involved in fire and two occupants were seen at separate windows on the third floor shouting for help. A 45-foot ladder was raised to a third floor window and Capt. Richard B. Mullen of Engine 16 ascended the ladder. While the captain was going up the ladder, the man disappeared from the window against which the ladder was placed. Captain Mullen entered the room through the window and found the man, who in a panic stricken effort to get out grabbed Captain Mullen around the neck, knocking off his fire helmet and making it almost impossible for the captain to lift him off the floor. After a strenuous effort, Captain Mullen succeeded in lifting the victim and carrying him to and out the window and down the ladder. The heat and smoke was so severe in the room that the rescued occupant suffered second and third degree burns about the body and suffered from smoke inhalation. X-rays taken at the Boston City Hospital disclosed that Captain Mullen had sustained strained ligaments of the neck caused by his strenuous effort in effecting the rescue.

Because of fact that Captain Mullen performed the foregoing rescue work without any thought for his own safety and at great risk to his person, the Fire Commissioner is pleased to commend him highly, and his case is referred to the Board of Merit for further consideration.

VIII. COMMENDATION

Fire Fighter Walter E. Kelley of the Fire Prevention Division is hereby commended for extinguishing a fire in the waiting room at the Savin Hill MTA station, at about 8.40 A.M., October 17, 1963, while he was on his way to work. Fire Fighter Kelley left the train on which he was a passenger, obtained an extinguisher from the operator and extinguished the fire on the outside wall of the waiting room. He notified an MTA employee to summon the Fire Department and fought the fire on the inside of the waiting room, using four other extinguishers until the arrival of the fire apparatus.

Desk sign: "Things to Do Today:

3. Get reorganized."

ALLOWING CITIES AND TOWNS TO ENTER INTO COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENTS:

On motion of Coun. PIEMONTE the rules were suspended on the order of business to allow him to offer the following order:

Ordered, That section 4C of chapter 40 of the General Laws, inserted by chapter 561 of the Acts of 1960 entitled: "An Act Allowing Cities and Towns to Enter into Collective Bargaining Agreements," be, and the same is hereby, accepted.

Passed under suspension of the rules.

ALLOWING CITIES AND TOWNS TO ENTER INTO COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENTS.

The following was received:

City of Boston,
Office of the Mayor, October 7, 1963.
To the City Council.
Gentlemen:

On August 1, 1960, after an opinion of the Attorney General upholding its constitutionality, 1960 House Document No. 2960 received executive approval and became chapter 561 of the Acts of 1960 entitled "An Act Allowing Cities and Towns to Enter Into Collective Bargaining Agreements," and amending chapter 40 of the General Laws by inserting a section 4C. The basic provision of this new section is that a city or town accepting the same "may engage in collective bargaining with labor organizations representing its employees, except police officers, and may enter into collective bargaining agreements with such organizations."

I have been hesitant about recommending that Boston accept this statute because, in Boston, so many of the subjects usually covered by collective bargaining agreement in private industry are governed by general or special statutes or are matters respecting which public officials cannot constitutionally bargain or contract away their power, that there is practically no room for a collective bargaining agreement. Recently, however, the above-cited opinion of the Attorney General has come to my attention and has convinced me that collective bargaining negotiations conceivably could disclose certain narrow limits within which a collective bargaining agreement might operate to the mutual advantage of the city employees. Accordingly, to enable the full exploration of the potential advantages of collective bargaining, I am recommending to you adoption of the order transmitted herewith accepting section 4C of chapter 40 of the General Laws.

Respectfully,

JOHN F. COLLINS, Mayor.

Ordered, That section 4C of chapter 40 of the General Laws, inserted by chapter 561 of the Acts of 1960 entitled "An Act Allowing Cities and Towns to Enter Into Collective Bargaining Agreements," be, and the same hereby is, accepted.

ORDERS AMENDING LOAN ORDER FOR NEW CITY HALL AND MUNICIPAL AUDITORIUM AND APPROPRIATING CERTAIN FUNDS FROM THE SUMNER TRAFFIC TUNNEL.

The following was received:

City of Boston,
Office of the Mayor, October 7, 1963.
To the City Council.
Gentlemen:

I submit herewith a communication from the City Auditor regarding provision of funds for the new City Hall and the Municipal Auditorium, and orders appropriating these funds from the amount received by the city from the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority on the transfer of the Sumner Traffic Tunnel. Included in these orders is provision for reducing the loans authorized by similar amounts.

I respectfully recommend the adoption of these orders by your Honorable Body.

Respectfully,

JOHN F. COLLINS, Mayor.

City of Boston,
Auditing Department, October 7, 1963.
Hon. John F. Collins,
Mayor of Boston.
Dear Sir:

On April 29, 1959, the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority paid to the City of Boston the sum of ten million, nineteen thousand, three hundred eighty dollars ($10,019,380), of which sum, seven million, nine hundred nineteen thousand, three hundred eighty dollars ($7,919,380) could, under the provisions of the statute, be used for any purpose or purposes for which debt could be issued outside the debt limit for a period of twenty years or more.

Some of the purposes for which these funds could be appropriated, for which debt has already been authorized, are the municipal auditorium, off-street parking facilities, and the new City Hall.

In 1959, 1960, and 1962, acting under the authority of the statute there was appropriated for the above purposes, the sum of three million, two hundred thousand dollars ($3,200,000); one million dollars ($1,000,000) for the municipal auditorium, two million dollars (2,000,- 000) for off-street parking facilities, and two hundred thousand dollars ($200,000) for the new City Hall. Also before the City Council at the present time are requests for appropriations in the amount of three hundred fifty-five thousand dollars ($355,000) for the Whitney Street Redevelopment Project and four hundred fifty-five thousand, five hundred dollars ($455,500) for the Public Works cost of the Washington Park Redevelopment project. The balance remaining available for appropriation is three million, nine hundred eight thousand, eight hundred eighty dollars ($3,908,880).

It will be necessary before the end of the year to provide the sum of two million, six hundred thousand dollars ($2,600,000) for the municipal auditorium and the sum of one million, three hundred eight thousand, eight hundred eighty dollars ($1,308,880) for the new City Hall. I therefore recommend that orders be presented for the consideration and adoption by the City Council appropriating the sum of two million, six hundred thousand dollars ($2,600,000) for the municipal auditorium and the sum of one million, three hundred eight thousand, eight hundred eighty dollars ($1,308,880) for the new City Hall from the above-mentioned proceeds of the Summer Traffic Tunnel transfer. At the same time I recommend that orders be presented reducing the amount of debt authorization for the municipal auditorium in the amount of two million, six hundred thousand dollars ($2,600,000) and for the new City Hall in the amount of one million, three hundred eight thousand, eight hundred eighty dollars ($1,308,880).

Very truly yours,

JOHN T. LEONARD,
Temporary City Auditor.

Ordered, That the order appropriating twelve million dollars to construct a municipal auditorium which order was passed by the City Council once on October 7, 1957, and again on October 22, 1957, and approved by the Mayor on October 22, 1957, and amended by an order passed by the City Council once on October 5, 1959, and again on October 19, 1959, and approved by the Mayor on October 20, 1959, and further amended by an order passed by the City Council, once on September 19, 1960, and again on October 3, 1960, and approved by the Mayor on October 6, 1960, be, and the same hereby is, further amended by striking out certain words inserted by the amendment approved by the Mayor on October 6, 1960, to wit, the words "the amount of seven million, two hundred forty-one thousand, three hundred forty-eight dollars and ninety-eight cents in accordance with said chapters" and inserting in place thereof the words "the amount of four million, six hundred forty-one thousand, three hundred forty-eight dollars and ninety-eight cents" and to use two million, six hundred thousand dollars out of the sum of three million, nine hundred eight thousand, eight hundred eighty dollars set aside under clause (1) of section 8 of chapter 598 of the Acts of 1958, which said two million, six hundred thousand dollars is hereby appropriated for such purpose.

Ordered, That the order appropriating twenty million dollars to construct a City Hall, which was passed by the City Council once on November 24, 1958, and again on December 12, 1958, and approved by the Mayor on December 22, 1958, and amended by an order passed by the City Council once on October 5, 1959, and again on December 14, 1959, and approved by the Mayor on December 16, 1959, and further amended by an order passed by the City Council once on November 13, 1962, and again on December 3, 1962, and approved by the Mayor on December 10, 1962, be, and the same hereby is, further amended by striking out certain words inserted by the amendment approved by the Mayor on December 10, 1962, to wit "nineteen million, eight hundred thousand dollars" and inserting in place thereof the words "eighteen million, four hundred ninety-one thousand, one hundred twenty dollars" and to use one million, Section 28-1.0. Design of Steel and Iron. — Structures of steel and iron shall be designed by methods admitting of rational analysis according to established principles of mechanics, supplemented by the assumptions herein specified, to support the loads and withstand the forces to which they are subject without exceeding the stresses allowed in this part for the various members and the materials thereof.

Sect. 28-1.1A. Plans and Drawings.

1.1.1A. Plans. — The plans (design drawings) shall show a complete design with sizes, sections, and the relative locations of the various members. Floor levels, column centers, and offsets shall be dimensioned. Plans shall be drawn to a scale large enough to convey the information adequately.

Plans shall indicate the class or classes of construction (as defined in Sect. 28-1.2A) to be employed, and they shall be supplemented by such data concerning the assumed loads, shears, moments and axial forces to be resisted by all members and their connections, as may be required for the proper preparation of the shop drawings.

Where joints are to be assembled with high strength bolts and are required to resist shear between the connected parts, the plans shall indicate the type of connections to be provided, namely, friction or bearing.

Camber of trusses, beams and girders, if required, shall be called for on the design drawings.

1.1.2A. Shop Drawings. — Shop drawings, giving complete information necessary for the fabrication of the component parts of the structure, including the types of material, the location, type and size of all rivets, bolts and welds, shall be prepared in advance of the actual fabrication. They shall clearly distinguish between shop and field rivets, bolts and welds.

Shop drawings shall be made in conformity with the best modern practice and with due regard to safety, speed and economy in fabrication and erection.

1.1.3. Notations for Welding. — Note shall be made on the plans and on the shop drawings of those joints or groups of joints in which it is especially important that the welding sequence and technique of welding be carefully controlled to minimize locked-up stresses and distortion.

Weld lengths called for on the plans and on the shop drawings shall be the net effective lengths.

1.1.4A. Standard Symbols and Nomenclature. — Welding symbols used on plans and shop drawings shall preferably be the American Welding Society symbols. Other adequate welding symbols may be used, provided a complete explanation thereof is shown on the plans or drawings.

Sect. 28-1.2A. Classes of Construction. — Three basic classes of construction and associated design assumptions are permissible under the respective conditions stated hereinafter, and each will govern in a specific manner the size of members and the types and strength of their connections.

Class A, commonly designated as "rigid-frame" (continuous frame), assumes that beam-to-column connections have sufficient rigidity to hold virtually unchanged the original angles between intersecting members.

Class B, commonly designated as "conventional" or "simple" framing (unrestrained, free-ended), assumes that the ends of beams and girders are connected for shear only, and are free to rotate under load.

Class C, commonly designated as "semi-rigid framing" (partially restrained), assumes that the connections of beams and girders possess a dependable and known moment capacity intermediate in degree between the complete rigidity of Class A and the complete flexibility of Class B.

The design of all connections shall be consistent with the assumptions as to class of construction called for on the design drawings.

Class A construction is unconditionally permitted under this Code. Two different methods of design are recognized. Within the limitations laid down in Sect. 28-2.1A, members of continuous frames, or continuous portions of frames, may be proportioned, on the basis of their maximum predictable strength, to resist the specified design loads multiplied by the prescribed load factors. Otherwise Class A construction shall be designed, within the limitations of Sect. 28-1.5A, to resist the stresses produced by the specified design loads, assuming moment distribution in accordance with the elastic theory.

Class B construction is permitted under this Code, subject to the stipulations of the following paragraph wherever applicable. Beam-to-column connections with seats for the reactions and with top clip angles for lateral support only are classed under Class B.

In tier buildings, designed in general as Class B construction (that is, with beam-to-column connections other than wind connections flexible) the distribution of the wind moments between the several joints of the frame may be made by a recognized empirical method provided that the wind connections, designed to resist the assumed moments, are adequate to resist the moments induced by the gravity loading and the wind loading at the increased unit stresses permitted therefor.

Class C (semi-rigid) construction will be permitted only upon evidence that the connections to be used are capable of furnishing, as a minimum, a predictable proportion of full end restraint. The proportioning of main members joined by such connections shall be predicated upon no greater degree of end restraint than this minimum.

Classes B and C construction may necessitate some non-elastic but self-limiting deformation of a structural steel part.

1.5.1.2. Shear. — On the gross section

$$F_v = 0.40F_y$$

For shear calculation, the gross section of beams and plate girders may be taken as the product of the overall depth and the thickness of the web. (See Sect. 28-1.10 for reduction required for thin webs.)

1.5.1.3A. Compression.

1.5.1.3.1. — On the gross section of axially loaded compression members when $\frac{Kl}{r}$, the largest effective slenderness ratio of any unbraced segment as defined in Sect. 28-1.8A, is less than C_c

where $$\text{F.S.} = \text{factor of safety} = \frac{5}{3} + \frac{3(Kl/r)}{8C_c} - \frac{(Kl/r)^3}{8C_c^2}$$

$$C_c = \sqrt{\frac{2\pi^2 E}{F_y}}$$

1.5.1.3.2. — On the gross section of axially loaded columns when l/r exceeds C_c

1.5.1.4.1. — Tension and compression on extreme fibers of laterally supported compact rolled shapes and compact built-up members having an axis of symmetry in the plane of loading

$$F_b = 0.66F_y$$

(In order to qualify as a compact section the width-thickness ratio of projecting elements of the compression flange shall not exceed $1,600/\sqrt{F_y}$, except that, for rolled shapes, an upward variation of 3 percent may be tolerated. The width-thickness ratio of flange plates in box sections and flange cover plates included between longitudinal lines of rivets, high strength bolts or welds shall not exceed $6,000/\sqrt{F_y}$. The depth-thickness ratio of the web, d/t , shall not exceed $13,300/\sqrt{F_y}$. When subjected to combined axial force and bending moment d/t shall not exceed $13,300(1 - 1.43f_a/F_a)/\sqrt{F_y}$ except that it need not be less than $8,000\sqrt{F_y}$. Flanges of compact built-up sections shall be continuously connected to the web or webs. Such members are deemed to be supported laterally when the distance, in inches, between points of support of the compression flange does not exceed $2,400b_f/\sqrt{F_y}$ nor $20,000,000A_f/dF_y$.)

Beams and girders which meet the requirements of the preceding paragraph and are continuous over supports or are rigidly framed to columns by means of rivets, high strength bolts or welds, may be proportioned for $\frac{9}{10}$ of the negative moments produced by gravity loading which are maximum at points of support, provided that, for such members, the maximum positive moment shall be increased by $\frac{1}{10}$ of the average negative moments. This reduction shall not apply to moments produced by loading on cantilevers. If the negative moment is resisted by a column rigidly framed to the beam or girder, the $\frac{1}{10}$ reduction may be used in proportioning the column for the combined axial and bending loading, provided that the unit stress, f_a due to any concurrent axial load on the member, does not exceed $0.15F_a$.

1.5.1.4.2A. — Tension and compression on extreme fibers of members, except channels, unsymmetrical about the plane of loading supported as in Sect. 28-1.5.1.4.1 in the region of compression stress

$$\text{In case } \frac{ld}{A_f} \geq \frac{40,000,000}{F_y} \text{ use}$$

$$F_b = \frac{12,000,000}{\frac{ld}{A_f}} \quad (5B)$$

where l is the unbraced length of the compression flange; r is the radius of gyration of a tee section comprising the compression flange plus one-sixth of

* Where l/r is less than 40, stress reduction according to Formula (4) may be neglected.

When the bending moment at any point within an unbraced length is larger than that at either end of this length the ratio M_1/M_2 shall be taken as unity. See Sect. 28-1.10 for further limitation in plate girder flange stress.

1.5.1.4.6A. — Compression on extreme fibers of channels, loaded in the plane parallel to the web which passes through the shear center, the value computed by Formulas (5), or (5B), but not more than

$$\frac{f_a}{0.6F_y} + \frac{f_b}{F_b} \leq 1.0 \quad \text{Formula (7b)}$$

where

F_a = axial stress that would be permitted if axial force alone existed

(In the expression for F'_e , l_b is the actual unbraced length in the plane of bending and r_b is the corresponding radius of gyration. K is the effective length factor in the plane of bending. As in the case of F_a , F_b and $0.6F_y$ as used in Formula (7b), F'_e may be increased one-third in accordance with Sect. 28-1.5.6.)

C_m = a coefficient whose value shall be as follows:

1. For compression members in frames subject to joint translation (side-sway), $C_m = 0.85$.

2. For restrained compression members in frames braced against joint translation and not subject to transverse loading between their supports in the plane of bending, $C_m = 0.6 + 0.4 \frac{M_1}{M_2}$, but not less than 0.4, where M_1/M_2 is the ratio of the smaller to the larger moments at the ends of that portion of the member, unbraced in the plane of bending, under consideration. M_1/M_2 is positive when the member is bent in single curvature and negative when it is bent in reverse curvature.

3. For compression members in frames braced against joint translation in the plane of loading and subjected to transverse loading between their supports, the value of C_m may be determined by rational analysis. However, in lieu of such analysis, the following values may be used: (a) for members whose ends are restrained, $C_m = 0.85$, (b) for members whose ends are unrestrained, $C_m = 1$.

Table C 1.6.1.1. — Revise as indicated.

Table C 1.6.1.1A

Category	Loading conditions ($f_a > 0.15F_a$)	f_b	C_m	Remarks
A	Computed moments maximum at end; joint translation not prevented	$\frac{M_2}{S}$	0.85	 $M_1 < M_2$; $\frac{M_1}{M_2}$ positive as shown Check Formulas (7a) & (7b)
B	Computed moments maximum at end; no transverse loading; joint translation prevented	$\frac{M_2}{S}$	$\left(0.4 \frac{M_1}{M_2} + 0.6 \right)$ but not less than 0.4	 Check both Formulas (7a) & (7b)
C	Transverse loading; joint translation prevented	$\frac{M_2}{S}$ Using Formula (7b) $\frac{M_3}{S}$ Using Formula (7a)	$1 + \psi \frac{f_a}{F'_e}$	 Check both Formulas (7a) & (7b)

When bending occurs simultaneously about both axes of a column the second (bending) term in Formula (7a) shall be evaluated as the sum of two terms, as

where the subscripts x and y refer to the principal axes of bending of the column profile.

Category (C) is exemplified by the compression chord of a truss, subject to transverse loading between panel points. For this case the value for C_m can be computed using the expression

$$C_m = 1 + \psi \frac{f_a}{F'_e}$$

where

$$\psi = \frac{\pi^2 \delta_0 EI}{M_0 L^2} - 1$$

δ_0 = maximum deflection due to transverse loading

M_0 = maximum moment between supports due to transverse loading

Values for ψ for several conditions of loading and end restraint are given in Table C 28-1.6.1.2.

1.6.2. Axial Tension and Bending.—Members subject to both axial tension and bending stresses shall be proportioned to satisfy the requirement of Formula (7b) where f_b and F_b are taken, respectively, as the computed and permitted bending tensile stress. However, the computed bending compressive stress, taken alone, shall not exceed the value permitted by Formulas (4), (5A) or (5B).

1.6.3A. Shear and Tension.—Rivets and bolts subject to combined shear and tension due to force applied to the connected parts, shall be so proportioned that the tension stress produced by the force shall not exceed the following:

For A141 rivets.....	$F_t = 28,000 - 1.6f_v \leq 20,000$
For A195 and A406 rivets.....	$F_t = 38,000 - 1.6f_v \leq 27,000$
For A307 bolts.....	$F_t = 20,000 - 1.6f_v \leq 14,000$
For A325 bolts in bearing-type joints	$F_t = 37,500 - 1.6f_v \leq 30,000$
For A354, Grade BC, bolts in bearing-type joints.....	$F_t = 45,000 - 1.6f_v \leq 37,500$ where f_v , the shear stress produced by the same force, shall not exceed the value for shear given in Sect. 28-1.5.2A.

For bolts used in friction-type joints, the shear stress allowed in Sect. 28-1.5.2A shall be reduced so that:

For A325 bolts.....	$F_v \leq 15,000(1 - f_t A_b / T_b)$
For A354, Grade BC, bolts.....	$F_v \leq 20,000(1 - f_t A_b / T_b)$

where f_t is the tensile stress due to applied load and T_b is the proof load of the bolt.

Sect. 28-1.7. Members and Connections Subject to Repeated Variation of Stress.

1.7.1. Up to 10,000 Complete Stress Reversals.—The stress-carrying area of members, connection material and fasteners* need not be increased because of repeated variation or reversal of stress unless the maximum stress allowed by Sect. 28-1.5 and 28-1.6 is expected to occur over 10,000† times in the life of the structure.

* As used in this Section, "fasteners" comprise welds, rivets and bolts.

† Approximately equivalent to one application per day for 25 years.

1.7.2. 10,000 to 100,000 Cycles of Maximum Load. — Members, connection material and fasteners (except high strength bolts in friction-type joints) subject to more than 10,000 but not over 100,000‡ applications of maximum design loading shall be proportioned, at unit stresses allowed in Sect. 28-1.5 and 28-1.6 for the kind of steel and fasteners used, to support the algebraic difference§ of the maximum computed stress and two-thirds of the minimum computed stress, but the stress-carrying area shall not be less than that required in proportioning the member, connection material and fasteners to support either the maximum or minimum computed stress at the values allowed in Sect. 28-1.5 and 28-1.6 for the kind of steel and fasteners used.

1.7.3. 100,000 to 2,000,000 Cycles of Maximum Load. — Members, connection material and fasteners (except high strength bolts in friction-type joints) subject to more than 100,000 but not more than 2,000,000¶ applications of maximum design loading shall be proportioned at unit stresses allowed in Sect. 28-1.5 and 28-1.6 for A7 steel, A141 rivet steel and E60XX and submerged arc Grade SAW-1 welds to support the algebraic difference of the maximum computed stress and $\frac{2}{3}$ of the minimum computed stress, but the stress-carrying area shall not be less than that required in proportioning the member, connection material and fasteners to support either the maximum or minimum computed stress at the values allowed in Sect. 28-1.5 and 28-1.6 for the kind of steel and fasteners used.

1.7.4. Over 2,000,000 Cycles of Maximum Load. — Members, connection material and fasteners (except high strength bolts in friction-type joints) subject to more than 2,000,000 applications of maximum design loading shall be proportioned at two-thirds of the unit stress allowed in Sect. 28-1.5 and 28-1.6 for A7 steel, A141 rivet steel and E60XX and submerged arc Grade SAW-1 welds to support the algebraic difference of the maximum computed stress and three-quarters of the minimum computed stress, but the stress-carrying area shall not be less than that required in proportioning the member, connection material and fastener to support either the maximum or minimum computed stress at the values allowed in Sect. 28-1.5 and 28-1.6 for the kind of steel and fasteners used.

1.7.5. Details. — Members subject to the provisions of Sect. 28-1.7.2, 28-1.7.3 and 28-1.7.4 shall have no sharp notches, sharp copes or attachments of clips, brackets or similar details, at locations where the stress exceeds 75 percent of those allowed in this section.

1.7.6. High Strength Bolted Connections. — High strength bolts in friction-type joints shall be proportioned at the unit stresses allowed in Sect. 28-1.5.2 and 28-1.6.2 to resist the largest stress on the joint produced by any single application of the design loads.

‡ Approximately equivalent to ten applications per day for 25 years.

§ In determining the algebraic difference, tensile stress is designated as positive and compression stress as negative.

¶ Approximately equivalent to 200 applications per day for 25 years.

Sect. 28-1.8A. Slenderness Ratios.

1.8.1A. Definition.

In determining the slenderness ratio of an axially loaded compression member, except as provided in Sect. 28-1.5.1.3.3A, the length shall be taken as its effective length Kl , and r as the corresponding radius of gyration.

1.8.2A. Sidesway Prevented. — In frames where lateral stability is provided by diagonal bracing, shear walls, attachment to an adjacent structure having adequate lateral stability, or by floor slabs or roof decks secured horizontally by walls or bracing systems parallel to the plane of the frame, and in trusses, the effective length factor K for the compression members shall be taken as unity, except as otherwise permitted in Sect. 28-1.8.3A.

1.8.3A. Determination of Effective Length. — The effective length Kl of compression members in a frame which depends upon its own bending stiffness for lateral stability, shall be determined by a rational method and shall not be less than the actual unbraced length.

Figs. 1 and 2 may be used to determine the effective length factor K which depends upon the end restraints and which when multiplied by the actual length gives the effective length for use in Formulas (1) and (2).

Figure A may be used in case effective means to prevent sidesway of the column are employed. Figure B shall be used in case sidesway is possible. In figures A and B the subscripts A and B refer to the joints at the two ends of the column section being considered. G is given by in which $\sum$ indicates a summation for all members, other than those the principal function of which is to resist tensile axial forces, rigidly connected to that joint as in Class A construction and lying in the plane in which buckling of the column is being considered, I_c is the moment of inertia and L_c the unsupported length of column section, and I_g is the moment of inertia and L_g the unsupported length of a girder or other restraining member. I_c and I_g shall be taken about axes perpendicular to the plane of buckling being considered.

In Figures A and B, having determined G_A and G_B for a column section, K is obtained by constructing a straight line between the appropriate points on the scales for G_A and G_B . For example, in Figure 1, if G_A is 0.5 and G_B is 1.0, K is found to be 0.73.

In case Class C "semi-rigid framing" is employed the values of $\frac{I_g}{L_g}$ shall be decreased sufficiently to fully reflect the effect of changes in angle between columns and girders or other restraining members.

For the case in which sidesway is permitted and the far end of a girder or other restraining member with respect to a given column is free to rotate in the plane of the frame (virtually hinged) the value of $\frac{I_g}{L_g}$ shall be reduced by 50 percent.

Refinements in the value of $\frac{I_g}{L_g}$ and K may be made provided they are fully substantiated by analysis supplemented if necessary by tests

For column ends supported by but not rigidly connected to a footing or foundation, G may be taken as 10 unless the support is designed as a true friction-free pin in which case G shall be taken as infinity. If the column end is rigidly attached to a properly designed footing, G may be taken as 1.0. Smaller values may be used if justified by analysis.

1.8.4. Maximum Ratios. — The slenderness ratio of compression members shall not exceed 200.

The slenderness ratio of tension members, other than rods, preferably should not exceed:

For main members.....	240
For bracing and other secondary members.....	300

Sect. 28-1.9. Width-Thickness Ratios.

1.9.1. Projecting Elements Under Compression. — Projecting elements of members subjected to axial compression or compression due to bending shall have ratios of width-to-thickness not greater than the following:

Single-angle struts; double-angle struts with separators	$2,400/\sqrt{F_y}$
Struts comprising double angles in contact; angles or plates projecting from girders, columns or other compression members; compression flanges of beams; stiffeners on plate girders.....	$3,000/\sqrt{F_y}$
Stems of tees.....	$4,000/\sqrt{F_y}$

The width of plates shall be taken from the free edge to the first row of rivets, bolts or welds; the width of legs of angles, channels and zees, and of the stems of tees, shall be taken as the full nominal dimension the width of flanges of beams and tees shall be taken as one-half the full nominal width. The thickness of a sloping flange shall be measured halfway between a free edge and the corresponding face of the web.

When a projecting element exceeds the width-to-thickness ratio prescribed in the preceding paragraph, but would conform to same and would satisfy the stress requirements with a portion of its width considered as removed, the member will be acceptable.

1.9.2. Compression Elements Supported Along Two Edges.— In compression members the unsupported width of web, cover or diaphragm plates between the nearest lines of fasteners or welds, or between the roots of the flanges in case of rolled sections, shall not exceed $8,000/\sqrt{F_y}$ times its thickness.

When the unsupported width exceeds this limit, but a portion of its width no greater than $8,000/\sqrt{F_y}$ times the thickness would satisfy the stress requirements, the member will be considered acceptable.

The unsupported width of cover plates perforated with a succession of access holes, may exceed $8,000/\sqrt{F_y}$, but shall not exceed $10,000/\sqrt{F_y}$ times the thickness. The gross width of the plate less the width of the widest access hole shall be assumed available to resist compression.

Sect. 28-1.10. Plate Girders and Rolled Beams.

1.10.1. Proportions.— Riveted and welded plate girders, cover-plated beams and rolled beams shall in general be proportioned by the moment of inertia of the gross section. No deduction shall be made for shop or field rivet or bolt holes in either flange, except that in cases where the reduction of the area of either flange by such holes, calculated in accordance with the provisions of Sect. 28-1.14.3 exceeds 15 percent of the gross flange area, the excess shall be deducted.

1.10.2. Web.— The clear distance between flanges in inches, shall not exceed times the web thickness.

$$\frac{14,000,000}{\sqrt{F_y} (F_y + 16,500)}$$

1.10.3. Flanges.— The thickness of outstanding parts of flanges shall conform to the requirements of Sect. 28-1.9.

Each flange of welded plate girders shall in general consist of a single plate rather than two or more plates superimposed. The single plate may comprise a series of shorter plates, laid end-to-end and joined by complete penetration butt welds.

Unstiffened cover plates on riveted girders shall not extend more than $3,000/\sqrt{F_y}$ times the thickness of the thinnest outside plate beyond the outer row of rivets or bolts connecting them to the angles. The total cross-sectional area of cover plates of riveted girders shall not exceed 70 percent of the total flange area.

1.10.4. Flange Development.— Rivets, high strength bolts or welds connecting flange to web, or cover plate to flange, shall be proportioned to resist the total horizontal shear resulting from the bending forces on the girder. The longitudinal distribution of these rivets, bolts or of intermittent welds shall be in proportion to the intensity of the shear. But the longitudinal spacing shall not exceed the maximum permitted, respectively, for compression or tension members in Sect. 28-1.18.2.3 or 28-1.18.3.1. Additionally, rivets or welds connecting flange to web shall be proportioned to transmit to the web any loads applied directly to the flange unless provision is made to transmit such loads by direct bearing.

Partial length cover plates shall be extended beyond the theoretical cut-off point and the extended portion shall be attached to the beam or girder by rivets, high strength bolts (friction-type joint), or fillet welds adequate, at stresses allowed in Sect. 28-1.5.2A or 28-1.5.3 or Sect. 28-1.7, to develop the cover plate's portion of the flexural stresses in the beam or girder at the theoretical cut-off point. In addition, for welded cover plates, the welds connecting the cover plate termination to the beam or girder in the length a' , defined below, shall be adequate, at the allowed stresses, to develop the cover plate's portion of the flexural stresses in the beam or girder at the distance a' from the end of the cover plate.* The length a' , measured from the end of the cover plate, shall be:

1. A distance equal to the width of the cover plate when there is a continuous weld equal to or larger than $\frac{3}{4}$ of the plate thickness across the end of the plate and continued welds along both edges of the cover plate in the length a' .
2. A distance equal to $1\frac{1}{2}$ times the width of the cover plate when there is a continuous weld smaller than $\frac{3}{4}$ of the plate thickness across the end of the plate and continued welds along both edges of the cover plate in the length a' .
3. A distance equal to 2 times the width of the cover plate when there is no weld across the end of the plate but continuous welds along both edges of the cover plate in the length a' .

1.10.5. Stiffeners.

1.10.5.1. — Bearing stiffeners shall be placed in pairs at unframed ends on the webs of plate girders and, where required,† at points of concentrated loads. Such stiffeners shall have a close bearing against the flange, or flanges, through which they receive their loads or reactions, and shall extend approximately to the edge of the flange plates or flange angles. They shall be designed as columns subject to the provisions of Sect. 28-1.5.1, assuming the column section to comprise the pair of stiffeners and a centrally located strip of the web whose width is equal to not more than 25 times its thickness at interior stiffeners or a width equal to not more than 12 times its thickness when the stiffeners are located at the end of the web. The effective length shall be taken as not less than $\frac{3}{4}$ of the length of the stiffeners in computing the ratio l/r . Only that portion of the stiffener outside of the angle fillet or the flange-to-web welds shall be considered effective in bearing.

1.10.5.2. — The largest average web shear f_v in any panel between stiffeners (total shear force divided by web cross-sectional area), in pounds per square inch, computed for any condition of complete or partial loading, shall not exceed the value given by Formula (8) or (9), as applicable.

* This may require the cover plate termination to be placed at a point in the beam or girder that has lower bending stress than the stress at the theoretical cut-off point.

† For provisions governing welded plate girders see Sect. 28-1.10.10.

$$F_v = \frac{F_y}{2.89} \left[C_v + \frac{1 - C_v}{1.15\sqrt{1 + (a/h)^2}} \right] \quad \text{Formula (8)}$$

when C_v is less than 1.0;

$$F_v = \frac{F_y}{2.89} (C_v) \quad \text{Formula (9)}$$ but not more than $0.4F_y$, when C_v is more than 1.0 or when intermediate stiffeners are omitted;

where

a = clear distance between transverse stiffeners, in inches

h = clear distance between flanges, in inches

$$C_v = \frac{45,000,000k}{F_y(h/t)^2}, \text{ when } C_v \text{ is less than } 0.8$$

$$= \frac{6,000}{h/t} \sqrt{\frac{k}{F_y}}, \text{ when } C_v \text{ is more than } 0.8$$

t = thickness of web, in inches

$$k = 4.00 + \frac{5.34}{(a/h)^2}, \text{ when } a/h \text{ is less than } 1.0$$

$$= 5.34 + \frac{4.00}{(a/h)^2}, \text{ when } a/h \text{ is more than } 1.0$$

When a/h is more than 3 its value shall be taken as infinity. In this case Formula (8) reduces to Formula (9) and $k = 5.34$.

1.10.5.3. — Intermediate stiffeners are not required when the ratio h/t is less than 260 and the maximum web shear stress f_v is less than that permitted by Formula (9).

The spacing of intermediate stiffeners, when stiffeners are required, shall be such that the web shear stress will not exceed the value for F_v given by Formulas (8) or (9), as applicable, and the ratio a/h shall not exceed $\left(\frac{260}{h/t}\right)^2$ nor 3.0.

The spacing between stiffeners at end panels and panels containing large holes shall be such that the smaller panel dimension, a or h , shall not exceed $\frac{11,000t}{\sqrt{f_v}}$.

1.10.5.4. — The gross area, in square inches, of intermediate stiffeners spaced in accordance with Formula (8) (total area, when stiffeners are furnished in pairs) shall be not less than that computed by Formula (10).

$$A_{st} = \frac{1 - C_v}{2} \left[\frac{a}{h} - \frac{(a/h)^2}{\sqrt{1 + (a/h)^2}} \right] YDht \quad \text{Formula (10)}$$

where

C_v , a , h and t are as defined in Sect. 28-1.10.5.2

$$Y = \frac{\text{yield point of web steel}}{\text{yield point of stiffener steel}}$$

$D = 1.0$ for stiffeners furnished in pairs
 $= 1.8$ for single angle stiffeners
 $= 2.4$ for single plate stiffeners

When the greatest shear stress f_v in a panel is less than that permitted by Formula (8) this gross area requirement may be reduced in like proportion.

The moment of inertia of a pair of stiffeners, or a single stiffener, with reference to an axis in the plane of the web, shall not be less than $(h/50)^4$.

Intermediate stiffeners may be stopped short of the tension flange a distance not to exceed 4 times the web thickness, provided bearing is not needed to transmit a concentrated load or reaction. When single stiffeners are used they shall be attached to the compression flange, if it consists of a rectangular plate, to resist any uplift tendency due to torsion in the plate. When lateral bracing is attached to a stiffener, or a pair of stiffeners, these, in turn, shall be connected to the compression flange to transmit 1 percent of the total flange stress, unless the flange is composed only of angles.

Intermediate stiffeners required by the provisions of Sect. 28-1.10.5.3 shall be connected for a total shear transfer, in pounds per linear inch of single stiffener or pair of stiffeners, not less than that computed by the formula where F_y = yield point of web steel.

This shear transfer may be reduced in the same proportion that the largest computed shear stress f_v in the adjacent panels is less than that permitted by Formula (8). However, rivets and welds in intermediate stiffeners which are required to transmit to the web an applied concentrated load or reaction shall be proportioned for not less than the applied load or reaction.

Rivets connecting stiffeners to the girder web shall be spaced not more than 12 inches on center. If intermittent fillet welds are used, the clear distance between welds shall not be more than 16 times the web thickness nor more than 10 inches.

1.10.6. Reduction in Flange Stress. — When the web depth-to-thickness ratio exceeds $24,000/\sqrt{F_b}$, the maximum stress in the compression flange shall not exceed

where

F_b = applicable bending stress given in Sect. 28-1.5.1

A_w = area of the web

A_f = area of compression flange

1.10.7. Combined Shear and Tension Stress. — Plate girder webs subject to a computed average shear stress in excess of that permitted by Formula (9) shall be so proportioned that bending tensile stress, due to moment in the plane of the girder web, shall not exceed $0.5F_y$ nor

$$\left(0.825 - 0.375 \frac{f_v}{F_v}\right) F_y \quad \text{Formula (12)}$$

where

f_v = computed web shear stress (total shear divided by web area)

F_v = allowable web shear stress according to Formula (8) or (9)

1.10.8. Splices. — Butt welded splices in plate girders and beams shall be complete penetration groove welds and shall develop the full strength of the smaller spliced section. Other types of splices in cross-sections of plate girders and in beams, shall develop the strength required by the stresses, at the point of splice, but in no case less than 50 percent of the effective strength of the material spliced.

1.10.9A. Horizontal Forces. — The flanges of plate girders supporting cranes or other moving loads shall be proportioned to resist the horizontal forces produced by such loads. (See Part 23)

1.10.10. Web Crippling.

1.10.10.1. — Webs of beams and welded plate girders shall be so proportioned that the compressive stress at the web toe of the fillets, resulting from concentrated loads not supported by bearing stiffeners, shall not exceed the value of $0.75F_y$ pounds per square inch allowed in Sect. 28-1.5.1; otherwise, bearing stiffeners shall be provided. The governing formulas shall be:

For interior loads,

$$\frac{R}{t(N + 2k)} = \text{not over } 0.75F_y \text{ pounds per square inch} \quad \text{Formula (13)}$$

For end-reactions,

$$\frac{R}{t(N + k)} = \text{not over } 0.75F_y \text{ pounds per square inch} \quad \text{Formula (14)}$$

where

R = concentrated load or reaction, in pounds

t = thickness of web, in inches

N = length of bearing in inches (not less than k for end reactions)

k = distance from outer face of flange to web toe of fillet, in inches

1.10.10.2. — Webs of plate girders shall also be so proportioned or stiffened that the sum of the compression stresses resulting from concentrated and distributed loads, bearing directly on or through a flange plate, upon the compression edge of the web plate, and not supported directly by bearing stiffeners, shall not exceed

when the flange is restrained against rotation, nor

$$\left[2 + \frac{4}{(a/h)^2} \right] \frac{10,000,000}{(h/t)^2} \text{ pounds per square inch} \quad \text{Formula (16)}$$

when the flange is not so restrained.

These stresses shall be computed as follows:

Concentrated loads and loads distributed over partial length of a panel shall be divided by the product of the web thickness and the girder depth or the length of panel in which the load is placed, whichever is the lesser panel dimension.

Any other distributed loading, in pounds per linear inch of length, shall be divided by the web thickness.

Sect. 28-1.11. Composite Construction.

1.11.1. Definition. — Composite construction shall consist of steel beams or girders supporting a reinforced concrete slab, so inter-connected that the beam and slab act together to resist bending. When the slab extends on both sides of the beam, the effective width of the concrete flange shall be taken as not more than one-fourth of the span of the beam, and its effective projection beyond the edge of the beam shall not be taken as more than one-half the clear distance to the adjacent beam, nor more than eight times the slab thickness. When the slab is present on only one side of the beam, the effective width of the concrete flange (projection beyond the beam) shall be taken as not more than one-twelfth of the beam span, nor six times its thickness nor one-half the clear distance to the adjacent beam.

Beams totally encased 2 inches or more on their sides and soffit in concrete poured integrally with the slab may be assumed to be interconnected to the concrete by natural bond, without additional anchorage, provided the top of the beam is at least 1½ inches below the top and 2 inches above the bottom of the slab, and provided that the encasement has adequate mesh or other reinforcing steel throughout the whole depth and across the soffit of the beam. When shear connectors are provided in accordance with Sect. 28-1.11.4, encasement of the beam to achieve composite action is not required.

1.11.2. Design Assumptions.

1.11.2.1. — Encased beams shall be proportioned to support unassisted all dead loads applied prior to the hardening of the concrete (unless these loads are supported temporarily on shoring) and, acting in conjunction with the slab, to support all dead and live loads applied after hardening of the concrete, without exceeding a computed bending stress of $0.66F_y$, where F_y is the yield point of the steel beam. The bending stress produced by loads after the concrete has hardened shall be computed on the basis of the moment of inertia of the composite section. Concrete tension stresses below the neutral axis of the composite section shall be neglected. Alternatively, the steel beam alone may be proportioned to resist unassisted the moment produced by all loads, live and dead, using a bending stress equal to $0.76F_y$, in which case temporary shoring is not required.

1.11.2.2. — When shear connectors are used in accordance with Sect. 28-1.11.4 the composite section shall be proportioned to support all of the loads without exceeding the allowable stress prescribed in Sect. 28-1.5.1.4.1 or 28-1.5.1.4.4, as applicable. The moment of inertia I_{tr} of the composite section shall be computed in accordance with the elastic theory. Concrete tension stresses below the neutral axis of the composite section shall be neglected. The compression area of the concrete above the neutral axis shall be treated as an equivalent area of steel by dividing it by the modular ratio n .

For construction without temporary shoring the value of the section modulus of the transformed composite section used in stress calculations (referred to the tension flange) shall not exceed where M_L and M_D are, respectively, the live load and dead load moments and S_s is the section modulus of the steel beam (referred to its tension flange) and provided that the steel beam alone, supporting the loads before the concrete has hardened, is not stressed to more than the applicable bending stress given in Sect. 28-1.5.1.

1.11.3. End Shear. — The web and the end connections of the steel beam shall be designed to carry the total dead and live loads.

1.11.4. Shear Connectors. — Except in the case of encased beams as defined in Sect. 28-1.11.1, the entire horizontal shear at the junction of the steel beam and the concrete slab shall be assumed to be transferred by shear connectors welded to the top flange of the beam and embedded in the concrete. The total horizontal shear to be thus resisted between the point of maximum positive moment and each end of the steel beam (or between the point of maximum positive moment and a point of contraflexure in continuous beams) shall be taken as the smaller value using the formulas

$$V_h = \frac{0.85f'_c A_c}{2} \quad \text{Formula (18)}$$

and

$$V_h = \frac{A_s F_y}{2} \quad \text{Formula (19)}$$

where

f'_c = specified compression strength of concrete at 28 days

A_s = area of steel beam

The number of connectors resisting this shear, each side of the point of maximum moment, shall not be less than that determined by the relationship V_h/q , where q , the allowable shear load for one connector, or one pitch of a spiral bar, is as given in Table 28-1.11.4.

Table 28-1.11.4

w = length of channel in inches.

The required number of shear connectors may be spaced uniformly between the sections of maximum and zero moment.

Shear connectors shall have at least 1 inch of concrete cover in all directions.

Sect. 28-1.12A. Simple and Continuous Spans.

1.12.1A. Simple Spans. — When beams, girders and trusses are designed on the basis of simple spans, the effective length shall be taken as the distance between centers of gravity of the members to which they deliver their end reactions.

1.12.2. End Restraint. — When designed on the assumption of full or partial end restraint, due to continuous, semi-continuous or cantilever action, the beams, girders and trusses, as well as the sections of the members to which they connect, shall be designed to carry the shears and moments so introduced, as well as all other forces, without exceeding at any point the unit stresses prescribed in Sect. 28-1.5.1; except that some non-elastic but self-limiting deformation of a part of the connection may be permitted when this is essential to the avoidance of overstressing of fasteners.

Sect. 28-1.13. Deflections. — Beams and girders supporting floors and roofs shall be proportioned with due regard to the deflection produced by the design loads.

Beams and girders supporting plastered ceilings shall be so proportioned that the maximum live load deflection will not exceed 1/360 of the span.

The depth of beams and girders supporting flat roofs shall be not less than $f_b/600,000$ times their span length whether designed as simple or continuous spans.

Sect. 28-1.14. Gross and Net Sections.

1.14.1. Definitions. — The gross section of a member at any point shall be determined by summing the products of the thickness and the gross width of each element as measured normal to the axis of the member. The net section shall be determined by substituting for the gross width the net width computed in accordance with Sect. 28-1.14.3 to 28-1.14.6 inclusive.

1.14.2. Application. — Unless otherwise specified, tension members shall be designed on the basis of net section. Compression members shall be designed on the basis of gross section. Beams and girders shall be designed in accordance with Sect. 28-1.10.1.

1.14.3. Net Section. — In the case of a chain of holes extending across a part in any diagonal or zigzag line, the net width of the part shall be obtained by deducting from the gross width the sum of the diameters of all the holes in the chain, and adding, for each gage space in the chain, the quantity

where

s = longitudinal spacing (pitch, in inches) of any two consecutive holes

g = transverse spacing (gage, in inches) of the same two holes

The critical net section of the part is obtained from that chain which gives the least net width; however, the net section taken through a hole shall in no case be considered as more than 85 percent of the corresponding gross section.

In determining the net section across plug or slot welds, the weld metal shall not be considered as adding to the net area.

1.14.4. Angles. — For angles, the gross width shall be the sum of the width of the legs less the thickness. The gage for holes in opposite legs shall be the sum of the gages from back of angles less the thickness.

1.14.5. Size of Holes. — In computing net area the diameter of a rivet or bolt hole shall be taken as $\frac{1}{8}$ inch greater than the nominal diameter of the rivet or bolt.

1.14.6. Pin-Connected Members. — Eyebars shall be of uniform thickness without reinforcement at the pin holes.* They shall have "circular" heads in which the periphery of the head beyond the pin hole is concentric with the pin hole. The radius of transition between the circular head and the body of the eyobar shall be equal to or greater than the diameter of the head.

The width of the body of the eyobar shall not exceed 8 times its thickness, and the thickness shall not be less than $\frac{1}{2}$ inch. The net section of the head through the pin hole transverse to the axis of the eyobar, shall not be less than 1.33 nor more than 1.50 times the cross-sectional area of the body of the eyebars. The diameter of the pin shall not be less than $\frac{7}{8}$ the width of the body of the eyebars. The diameter of the pin hole shall not be more than $\frac{1}{16}$ inch greater than the diameter of the pin.

The minimum net section across the pin hole, transverse to the axis of the member, in pin-connected plates and built-up members shall be determined at the stress allowed for such sections in Sect. 28-1.5.1.1. The net section beyond the pin hole, parallel to the axis of the member, shall not be less than $\frac{2}{3}$ of the net section across the pin hole. The corners beyond the pin hole may be cut at 45° to the axis of the member provided the net section beyond the pin hole on a plane perpendicular to the cut is not less than that required beyond the pin hole parallel to the axis of the member. The parts of members built up at the pin hole shall be attached to each other by sufficient fasteners to support the stress delivered to them by the pin.

The distance transverse to the axis of a pin-connected plate or any separated element of a built-up member from the edge of the pin hole to the edge of the member or element, shall not exceed 4 times the thickness at the pin hole. The diameter of the pin shall preferably not be less than 5 times the thickness of the member or separated element at the pin hole. If a smaller size is used, the bearing stress shall not exceed that allowed by Sect. 28-1.5.1. The diameter of the pin hole shall not be more than $\frac{1}{16}$ inch greater than the diameter of the pin.

1.14.7. Effective Areas of Weld Metal.—The effective area of butt and fillet welds shall be considered as the effective length of the weld times the effective throat thickness.

The effective shearing area of plug and slot welds shall be considered as the nominal cross-sectional area of the hole or slot, in the plane of the faying surface.

The effective area of fillet welds in holes and slots shall be computed as above specified for fillet welds, using for effective length, the length of center-line of the weld through the center of the plane through the throat. However, in the case of overlapping fillets, the effective area shall not exceed the nominal cross-sectional area of the hole or slot, in the plane of the faying surface.

The effective length of a fillet weld shall be the overall length of full-size fillet including returns.

The effective length of a butt weld shall be the width of the part joined.

The effective throat thickness of a fillet weld shall be the shortest distance from the root to the face of the diagrammatic weld.

The effective throat thickness of a complete penetration butt weld (i.e., a butt weld conforming to the requirements of Sect. 28-1.23.6) shall be the thickness of the thinner part joined.

The effective throat thickness of single-V or single-bevel groove welds having no root opening and having partial penetration into their joints shall be $\frac{1}{4}$ inch less than the depth of the V or bevel groove. The effective throat thickness of single-J or single-U groove welds having no root opening and having partial penetration into their joints shall be the depth of the J or U groove. The effective throat thickness of any of these partial penetration groove welds shall be not less than $\sqrt{t_t/6}$, where t_t is the thickness of the thinner part connected by the weld.

Sect. 28-1.15. Connections.

1.15.1. Minimum Connections. — Connections carrying calculated stresses, except for lacing, sag bars, and girts, shall be designed to support not less than 6,000 pounds.

1.15.2. Eccentric Connections. — Axially stressed members meeting at a point shall have their gravity axes intersect at a point if practicable; if not, provision shall be made for bending stresses due to the eccentricity.

1.15.3. Placement of Rivets, Bolts and Welds. — Except as hereinafter provided, the rivets, bolts or welds at the ends of any member transmitting axial stress into that member shall have their centers of gravity on the gravity axis of the member unless provision is made for the effect of the resulting eccentricity. Except in members subject to repeated variation in stress, as defined in Sect. 28-1.7, disposition of fillet welds to balance the forces about the neutral axis or axes for end connections of single angle, double angle, and similar type members is not required. Eccentricity between the gravity axes of such members and the gage lines for their riveted or bolted end connections may be neglected.

1.15.4. Unrestrained Members. — Except as otherwise indicated by the designer, connections of beams, girders or trusses shall be designed as flexible, and may ordinarily be proportioned for the reaction shears only.

Flexible beam connections shall permit the ends of the beam to rotate sufficiently to accommodate its deflection by providing for a horizontal displacement of the top flange determined as follows:

$$e = 0.007d \quad \text{when the beam is designed for full uniform load and for live load deflection not exceeding } 1/360 \text{ of the span}$$

$$= \frac{f_b L}{3,600,000} \quad \text{when the beam is designed for full uniform load producing the unit stress } f_b \text{ at mid-span}$$

where

e = the horizontal displacement of the end of the top flange, in the direction of the span, in inches

f_b = the flexural unit stress in the beam at mid-span, in pounds per square inch

d = the depth of the beam, in inches

L = the span of the beam, in feet

1.15.5. Restrained Members. — Fasteners or welds for end connections of beams, girders and trusses not conforming to the requirements of Sect. 28-1.15.4 shall be designed for the combined effect of end reaction shear and tensile or compressive stresses resulting from moment induced by the rigidity of the connection when the member is fully loaded.

1.15.6. Fillers. — When rivets or bolts carrying computed stress pass through fillers thicker than $\frac{1}{4}$ inch, except in friction-type connections assembled with high strength bolts, the fillers shall be extended beyond the splice material and the filler extension shall be secured by enough rivets or bolts to distribute the total stress in the member uniformly over the combined section of the member and the filler, or an equivalent number of fasteners shall be included in the connection.

In welded construction, any filler $\frac{1}{4}$ inch or more in thickness shall extend beyond the edges of the splice plate and shall be welded to the part on which it is fitted with sufficient weld to transmit the splice plate stress, applied at the surface of the filler as an eccentric load. The welds joining the splice plate to the filler shall be sufficient to transmit the splice plate stress and shall be long enough to avoid overstressing the filler along the toe of the weld. Any filler less than $\frac{1}{4}$ inch thick shall have its edges made flush with the edges of the splice plate and the weld size shall be the sum of the size necessary to carry the splice plate stress plus the thickness of the filler plate.

1.15.7. Connections of Tension and Compression Members in Trusses. — The connections at ends of tension or compression members in trusses shall develop the strength required by the stress, but not less than 50 percent of the effective strength of the member. Groove welds in connections at the ends of tension or compression members in trusses shall be complete penetration groove welds.

1.15.8. Compression Members with Bearing Joints. — Where compression members bear on bearing plates, and where tier-building columns are finished to bear, there shall be sufficient rivets, bolts or welds to hold all parts securely in place.

Where other compression members are finished to bear, the splice material and its riveting, bolting or welding shall be arranged to hold all parts in line and shall be proportioned for 50 percent of the computed stress.

All of the foregoing joints shall be proportioned to resist any tension that would be developed by specified lateral forces acting in conjunction with 75 percent of the calculated dead load stress and no live load.

1.15.9. Combination of Welds. — If two or more of the general types of weld (butt, fillet, plug, slot) are combined in a single joint, the effective capacity of each shall be separately computed with reference to the axis of the group, in order to determine the allowable capacity of the combination.

1.15.10. Rivets and Bolts in Combination with Welds. — In new work, rivets, A307 bolts, or high strength bolts used in bearing-type connections, shall not be considered as sharing the stress in combination with welds. Welds, if used, shall be provided to carry the entire stress in the connection. High strength bolts installed in accordance with the provisions of Sect. 28-1.16.1A as a friction-type connection prior to welding may be considered as sharing the stress with the welds.

In making welded alterations to structures, existing rivets and properly tightened high strength bolts may be utilized for carrying stresses resulting from existing dead loads, and the welding need be adequate only to carry all additional stress.

1.15.11. High Strength Bolts (in Friction-Type Joints) in Combination with Rivets. — In new work and in making alterations, rivets and high strength bolts, installed in accordance with the provisions of Sect. 28-1.16.1A as friction-type connections, may be considered as sharing the stresses resulting from dead and live loads.

1.15.12. Field Connections. — Rivets, high strength bolts or welds shall be used for the following connections:

Column splices in all tier structures 200 feet or more in height.

Column splices in tier structures 100 to 200 feet in height, if the least horizontal dimension is less than 40 percent of the height.

Column splices in tier structures less than 100 feet in height, if the least horizontal dimension is less than 25 percent of the height.

Connections of all beams and girders to columns and of any other beams and girders on which the bracing of columns is dependent, in structures over 125 feet in height.

Roof-truss splices and connections of trusses to columns, column splices, column bracing, knee braces and crane supports, in all structures carrying cranes of over 5-ton capacity.

Connections for supports of running machinery, or of other live loads which produce impact or reversal of stress.

Any other connections stipulated on the design plans.

In all other cases field connections may be made with A307 bolts.

For the purpose of this Section, the height of a tier structure shall be taken as the vertical distance from the curb level to the highest point of the roof beams, in the case of flat roofs, or to the mean height of the gable, in the case of roofs having a rise of more than $2\frac{1}{2}$ in 12. Where the curb level has not been established, or where the structure does not adjoin a street, the mean level of the adjoining land shall be used instead of curb level. Penthouses may be excluded in computing the height of structure.

Sect. 28-1.16A. Rivets and Bolts.

1.16.1A. High Strength Bolts. — Use of high strength bolts shall conform to the provisions of the Specifications for Structural Joints Using ASTM A325 Bolts as approved by the Research Council on Riveted and Bolted Structural Joints, March 1962, except that A354, Grade BC, bolts meeting the dimensional requirements of the Council's specification and tightened to their proof load, may be substituted for A325 bolts at the working stresses permitted in Sects. 28-1.5A and 28-1.6A.

1.16.2. Effective Bearing Area. — The effective bearing area of rivets and bolts shall be the diameter multiplied by the length in bearing, except that for countersunk rivets and bolts half the depth of the countersink shall be deducted.

1.16.3. Long Grips. — Rivets and A307 bolts which carry calculated stress, and the grip of which exceeds five diameters, shall have their number increased 1 percent for each additional $\frac{1}{16}$ inch in the grip.

1.16.4. Minimum Pitch. — The minimum distance between centers of rivet and bolt holes shall be not less than $2\frac{2}{3}$ times the nominal diameter of the rivet or bolt but preferably not less than 3 diameters.

1.16.5. Minimum Edge Distance. — The minimum distance from the center of a rivet or bolt hole to any edge, used in design or in preparation of shop drawings, shall be that given in Table 28-1.16.5.

Table 28-1.16.5

* These may be $1\frac{1}{4}$ inches at the ends of beam connection angles.

† All edge distances in this column may be reduced $\frac{1}{8}$ inch when the hole is at a point where stress does not exceed 25 percent of the maximum allowed stress in the element.

1.16.6. Minimum Edge Distance in Line of Stress. — In bearing-type connections of tension members, where there are not more than two fasteners in a line parallel to the direction of stress, the distance from the center of the end fastener and that end of the connected part toward which the stress is directed shall be not less than

(a) for riveted connections: the area of the fastener divided by the thickness of the connected part for fasteners in single shear, and twice this distance for fasteners in double shear.

(b) for high strength bolted connections: $1\frac{1}{2}$ times the distances given in (a).

The end distance may, however, be decreased in such proportion as the fastener stress is less than that permitted under Sect. 28-1.5.2A, but it shall not be less than the distance specified in Sect. 28-1.16.5 above.

When more than two fasteners are provided in the line of stress the provisions of Sect. 28-1.16.5 shall govern.

1.16.7. Maximum Edge Distance.—The maximum distance from the center of any rivet or bolt to the nearest edge of parts in contact with one another shall be 12 times the thickness of the plate, but shall not exceed 6 inches.

Sect. 28-1.17. Welds.

1.17.1. Welder and Welding Operator Qualifications.—Welds shall be made only by welders and welding operators who have been previously qualified by tests as prescribed in the Standard Code for Arc and Gas Welding in Building Construction of the American Welding Society, to perform the type of work required, except that this provision need not apply to tack welds not later incorporated into finished welds carrying calculated stress.

1.17.2. Qualifications of Weld and Joint Details.—Weld grooves for complete penetration welds which are accepted without welding procedure qualification under the Standard Code for Welding in Building Construction or the D1.0-63 Standard Specification for Welded Highway and Railway Bridges D2.0-63 of the American Welding Society may be used under this Specification without welding procedure qualification.

Weld grooves of the 60° single-V, 45° single-bevel, single-J or single-U form, conforming to the details for such grooves provided in the above AWS Standards but having partial penetration with an effective throat thickness as defined in Sect. 28-1.14.7 and no root opening, may be used under this Specification without welding procedure qualification. However, they shall not be used in butt joints to resist tensile stress acting in a direction normal to the plane of the weld throat, except in splices or connections of columns or other members subject primarily to axial compressive stress.

Joint forms or welding procedures other than those included in the foregoing may be employed provided they shall have been qualified in accordance with the requirements of these AWS Standards.

ASTM-A233 class E60 and E70* series electrodes for manual arc welding and Grade SAW-1 or Grade SAW-2* submerged arc process may be used for welding A7, A373 and A36 steel. Only E70 low-hydrogen electrodes for manual arc welding or Grade SAW-2 for submerged arc welding shall be used with A441 or weldable A242 steel, except that fillet welds or partial penetration groove welds may be made with E60 series low-hydrogen electrodes and Grade SAW-1 submerged arc process.

Welding A440 steel is not recommended.

* See allowable stresses, Sect. 28-1.5.3.

1.17.3. Submerged Arc Welding. — The bare electrodes and granular fusible flux used in combinations for submerged arc welding shall be capable of producing weld metal having the following tensile properties when deposited in a multiple pass weld

Grade SAW-1

Tensile strength.....	62,000 to 80,000 psi

1.17.4. Minimum Size of Fillet Welds. — In joints connected only by fillet welds, the minimum size of fillet weld to be used shall be as shown in Table 28-1.17.4 weld size is determined by the thicker of the two parts joined, except that the weld size need not exceed the thickness of the thinner part joined unless a larger size is required by calculated stress:

Table 28-1.17.4

Material Thickness of Thicker Part Joined (Inches)	Minimum Size of Fillet Weld (Inches)
To $\frac{1}{2}$ inclusive	$\frac{3}{16}$
Over $\frac{1}{2}$ to $\frac{3}{4}$	$\frac{1}{4}$
Over $\frac{3}{4}$ to $1\frac{1}{2}$	$\frac{5}{16}$
Over $1\frac{1}{2}$ to $2\frac{1}{4}$	$\frac{3}{8}$
Over $2\frac{1}{4}$ to 6	$\frac{1}{2}$
Over 6	$\frac{5}{8}$

1.17.5. Maximum Effective Size of Fillet Welds. — The maximum size of a fillet weld that may be assumed in the design of a connection shall be such that the stresses in the adjacent base material do not exceed the values allowed in Sect. 28-1.5.1. The maximum size that may be used along edges of connected parts shall be:

1. Along edges of material less than $\frac{1}{4}$ inch thick, the maximum size may be equal to the thickness of the material.
2. Along edges of material $\frac{1}{4}$ inch or more in thickness, the maximum size shall be $\frac{1}{16}$ inch less than the thickness of the material, unless the weld is especially designated on the drawings to be built out to obtain full throat thickness.

1.17.6. Length of Fillet Welds. — The minimum effective length of a strength fillet weld shall be not less than 4 times the nominal size, or else the size of the weld shall be considered not to exceed one-fourth of its effective length.

If longitudinal fillet welds are used alone in end connections of flat bar tension members, the length of each fillet weld shall be not less than the perpendicular distance between them. The transverse spacing of longitudinal fillet welds used in end connections shall not exceed 8 inches, unless the design otherwise prevents excessive transverse bending in the connection.

1.17.7. Intermittent Fillet Welds. — Intermittent fillet welds may be used to transfer calculated stress across a joint or faying surfaces when the strength required is less than that developed by a continuous fillet weld of the smallest permitted size, and to join components of built-up members. The effective length of any segment of intermittent fillet welding shall be not less than 4 times the weld size with a minimum of $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches.

1.17.8. Lap Joints. — The minimum width of laps on lap joints shall be 5 times the thickness of the thinner part joined and not less than 1 inch. Lap joints joining plates or bars subjected to axial stress shall be fillet welded along the edge of both lapped parts except where the deflection of the lapped parts is sufficiently restrained to prevent opening of the joint under maximum loading.

1.17.9. End Returns of Fillet Welds. — Side or end fillet welds terminating at ends or sides, respectively, of parts or members shall, wherever practicable, be returned continuously around the corners for a distance not less than twice the nominal size of the weld. This provision shall apply to side and top fillet welds connecting brackets, beam seats and similar connections, on the plane about which bending moments are computed. End returns shall be indicated on the design and detail drawings.

1.17.10. Fillet Welds in Holes and Slots. — Fillet welds in holes or slots may be used to transmit shear in lap joints or to prevent the buckling or separation of lapped parts, and to join components of built-up members. Such fillet welds may overlap, subject to the provisions of Sect. 28-1.14.7. Fillet welds in holes or slots are not to be considered plug or slot welds.

1.17.11. Plug and Slot Welds. — Plug or slot welds may be used to transmit shear in a lap joint or to prevent buckling of lapped parts and to join component parts of built-up members.

The diameter of the holes for a plug weld shall be not less than the thickness of the part containing it plus $\frac{5}{16}$ inch, rounded to the next greater odd $\frac{1}{16}$ inch, nor greater than $2\frac{1}{4}$ times the thickness of the weld metal.

The minimum center-to-center spacing of plug welds shall be 4 times the diameter of the hole.

The length of slot for a slot weld shall not exceed 10 times the thickness of the weld. The width of the slot shall be not less than the thickness of the part containing it, plus $\frac{5}{16}$ inch, rounded to the next greater odd $\frac{1}{16}$ inch, nor shall it be greater than $2\frac{1}{4}$ times the thickness of the weld. The ends of the slot shall be semicircular or shall have the corners rounded to a radius not less than the thickness of the part containing it, except those ends which extend to the edge of the part.

The minimum spacing of lines of slot welds in a direction transverse to their length shall be 4 times the width of the slot. The minimum center-to-center spacing in a longitudinal direction on any line shall be 2 times the length of the slot.

The thickness of plug or slot welds in material $\frac{5}{8}$ inch or less in thickness shall be equal to the thickness of the material. In material over $\frac{5}{8}$ inch in thickness, it shall be at least one-half the thickness of the material but not less than $\frac{5}{8}$ inch.

Sect. 28-1.18. Built-Up Members.

1.18.1. Open Box-Type Beams and Grillages.— Where two or more rolled beams or channels are used side-by-side to form a flexural member, they shall be connected together at intervals of not more than 5 feet. Through-bolts and separators may be used, provided that in beams having a depth of 12 inches or more, no fewer than 2 bolts shall be used at each separator location. When concentrated loads are carried from one beam to the other, or distributed between the beams, diaphragms having sufficient stiffness to distribute the load shall be riveted, bolted or welded between the beams. Where beams are exposed, they shall be sealed against corrosion of interior surfaces, or spaced sufficiently far apart to permit cleaning and painting.

1.18.2. Compression Members.

1.18.2.1.— All parts of built-up compression members and the transverse spacing of their lines of fasteners shall meet the requirements of Sects. 28-1.8 and 28-1.9.

1.18.2.2.— At the ends of built-up compression members bearing on base plates or milled surfaces, all components in contact with one another shall be connected by rivets or bolts spaced longitudinally not more than 4 diameters apart for a distance equal to $1\frac{1}{2}$ times the maximum width of the member, or by continuous welds having a length not less than the maximum width of the member.

1.18.2.3.— The longitudinal spacing for intermediate rivets, bolts or intermittent welds in built-up members shall be adequate to provide for the transfer of calculated stress. However, where a component of a built-up compression member consists of an outside plate, the maximum spacing shall not exceed the thickness of the thinner outside plate times $4,000/\sqrt{F_y}$ when rivets are provided on all gage lines at each section, or when intermittent welds are provided along the edges of the components, but this spacing shall not exceed 12 inches. When rivets or bolts are staggered, the maximum spacing on each gage line shall not exceed the thickness of the thinner outside plate times $6,000/\sqrt{F_y}$ nor 18 inches. The maximum longitudinal spacing of rivets, bolts or intermittent welds connecting two rolled shapes in contact with one another shall not exceed 24 inches.

1.18.2.4. — Compression members composed of two or more rolled shapes separated from one another by intermittent fillers shall be connected to one another at these fillers at intervals such that the slenderness ratio l/r of either shape, between the fasteners, does not exceed the governing slenderness ratio of the built-up member. The least radius of gyration r shall be used on computing the slenderness ratio of each component part.

1.18.2.5. — Open sides of compression members built up from plates or shapes shall be provided with lacing having tie plates at each end, and at intermediate points if the lacing is interrupted. Tie plates shall be as near the ends as practicable. In main members carrying calculated stress the end tie plates shall have a length of not less than the distance between the lines of rivets, bolts or welds connecting them to the components of the member. Intermediate tie plates shall have a length not less than one-half of this distance. The thickness of tie plates shall be not less than $1/50$ of the distance between the lines of rivets, bolts or welds connecting them to the segments of the members. In riveted and bolted construction the pitch in tie plates shall be not more than 6 diameters and the tie plates shall be connected to each segment by at least three fasteners. In welded construction, the welding on each line connecting a tie plate shall aggregate not less than one-third the length of the plate.

1.18.2.6A. — Lacing, including flat bars, angles, channels or other shapes employed as lacing, shall be so spaced that the ratio l/r of the flange included between their connections shall not exceed the governing ratio for the member as a whole. Lacing shall be proportioned to resist a shearing stress normal to the axis of the member equal to 2 percent of the total compressive stress in the member. The ratio l/r for lacing bars arranged in single systems shall not exceed 140. For double lacing this ratio shall not exceed 200. Double lacing bars shall be joined at their intersections. In determining the required section for lacing bars, Formula (1) or (3) shall be used, Kl being taken as the unsupported length of the lacing bar between rivets or welds connecting it to the components of the built-up member for single lacing and 70 percent of that distance for double lacing. The inclination of lacing bars to the axis of the member shall preferably be not less than 60 degrees for single lacing and 45 degrees for double lacing. When the distance between the lines of rivets or welds in the flanges is more than 15 inches, the lacing shall preferably be double or be made of angles.

1.18.2.7. — The function of tie plates and lacing may be performed by continuous cover plates perforated with a succession of access holes. The width of such plates at access holes, as defined in Sect. 28-1.9.2, is assumed available to resist axial stress, provided that: the width-to-thickness ratio conforms to the limitations of Sect. 28-1.9.2; the ratio of length (in direction of stress) to width of hole shall not exceed 2; the clear distance between holes in the direction of stress shall be not less than the transverse distance between nearest lines of connecting rivets, bolts or welds; and the periphery of the holes at all points shall have a minimum radius of $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches.

1.18.3. Tension Members.

1.18.3.1. — The longitudinal spacing of rivets, bolts and intermittent fillet welds connecting a plate and a rolled shape in a built-up tension member, or two plate components in contact with one another, shall not exceed 24 times the thickness of the thinner plate nor 12 inches. The longitudinal spacing of rivets, bolts and intermittent welds connecting two or more shapes in contact with one another in a tension member shall not exceed 24 inches. Tension members composed of two or more shapes or plates separated from one another by intermittent fillers shall be connected to one another at these fillers at intervals such that the slenderness ratio of either component between the fasteners does not exceed 240.

1.18.3.2. — Either perforated cover plates or tie plates without lacing may be used on the open sides of built-up tension members. Tie plates shall have a length not less than two-thirds the distance between the lines of rivets, bolts or welds connecting them to the components of the member. The thickness of such tie plates shall not be less than 1/50 of the distance between these lines. The longitudinal spacing of rivets, bolts or intermittent welds at tie plates shall not exceed 6 inches. The spacing of tie plates shall be such that the slenderness ratio of any component in the length between tie plates will not exceed 240.

Sect. 28-1.19. Camber.

1.19.1. Trusses and Girders. — Trusses of 80 feet or greater span should generally be cambered for approximately the dead load deflection. Crane girders of 75 feet or greater span should generally be cambered for approximately the dead and half live load deflection.

1.19.2. Camber for Other Trades. — If any special camber requirements are necessary in order to bring a loaded member into proper relation with the work of other trades, as for the attachment of runs of sash, the requirements shall be set forth on the plans and on the detail drawings.

1.19.3. Erection. — Beams and trusses detailed without specified camber shall be fabricated so that after erection any minor camber due to rolling or shop assembly shall be upward. If camber involves the erection of any member under a straining force, this shall be noted on the erection diagram.

Sect. 28-1.20. Expansion. — Adequate provision shall be made for expansion and contraction appropriate to the service conditions of the structure.

Sect. 28-1.21. Column Bases.

1.21.1. Loads. — Proper provision shall be made to transfer the column loads, and moments if any, to the footings and foundations.

1.21.2. Alignment. — Column bases shall be set level and to correct elevation with full bearing on the masonry.

1.21.3. Finishing. — Column bases shall be finished in accordance with the following requirements:

1. Rolled steel bearing plates, 2 inches or less in thickness, may be used without planing, provided a satisfactory contact bearing is obtained; rolled steel bearing plates over 2 inches but not over 4 inches in thickness may be straightened by pressing; or, if presses are not available, by planing for all bearing surfaces (except as noted under Requirement 3 of this Section), to obtain a satisfactory contact bearing; rolled steel bearing plates over 4 inches in thickness shall be planed for all bearing surfaces (except as noted under Requirement 3 of this Section).

2. Column bases other than rolled steel bearing plates shall be planed for all bearing surfaces (except as noted under Requirement 3 of this Section).

3. The bottom surfaces of bearing plates and column bases which are grouted to insure full bearing contact on foundations need not be planed.

Sect. 28-1.22. Anchor Bolts. — Anchor bolts shall be designed to provide resistance to all conditions of tension and shear at the bases of columns, including the net tensile components of any bending moments which may result from fixation or partial fixation of columns.

Sect. 28-1.23. Fabrication.

1.23.1. Straightening Material. — Rolled material, before being laid off or worked, must be straight within the tolerances allowed by ASTM specification A6-62T. If straightening is necessary, it shall be done by methods that will not injure the metal.

1.23.2. Gas Cutting. — Gas cutting shall preferably be done by machine. Gas cut edges which will be subjected to substantial stress or which are to have weld metal deposited on them shall be free from gouges; any gouges that remain from cutting shall be removed by grinding. All re-entrant corners shall be shaped notch free to a radius of at least $\frac{1}{2}$ inch.

1.23.3. Planing of Edges. — Planing or finishing of sheared or gas cut edges of plates or shapes will not be required unless specifically called for on the drawings or included in a stipulated edge preparation for welding.

1.23.4. Riveted and Bolted Construction — Holes. — Holes for rivets or bolts shall be $\frac{1}{16}$ inch larger than the nominal diameter of the rivet or bolt. If the thickness of the material is not greater than the nominal diameter of the rivet or bolt plus $\frac{1}{8}$ inch, the holes may be punched. If the thickness of the material is greater than the nominal diameter of the rivet or bolt plus $\frac{1}{8}$ inch, the holes shall be either drilled from the solid, or sub-punched and reamed. The die for all sub-punched holes, and the drill for all sub-drilled holes, shall be at least $\frac{1}{16}$ inch smaller than the nominal diameter of the rivet or bolt.

1.23.5. Riveted and High Strength Bolted Construction — Assembling. — All parts of riveted members shall be well pinned or bolted and rigidly held together while riveting. Drifting done during assembling shall not distort the metal or enlarge the holes. Holes that must be enlarged to admit the rivets or bolts shall be reamed. Poor matching of holes shall be cause for rejection.

Rivets shall be driven by power riveters, of either compression or manually-operated type, employing pneumatic, hydraulic or electric power. After driving they shall be tight and their heads shall be in full contact with the surface.

Rivets shall ordinarily be hot-driven, in which case their finished heads shall be of approximately hemispherical shape and shall be of uniform size throughout the work for the same size rivet, full, neatly finished and concentric with the holes. Hot-driven rivets shall be heated uniformly to a temperature not exceeding 1950°F; they shall not be driven after their temperature has fallen below 1000°F.

Rivets may be driven cold if approved measures are taken to prevent distortion of the riveted material. The requirements for hot-driven rivets shall apply except as modified in the Tentative Specification for Cold-Driven Rivets of the Industrial Fasteners Institute.

Surfaces of high strength bolted parts in contact with the bolt head and nut shall not have a slope of more than 1:20 with respect to a plane normal to the bolt axis. Where the surface of a high strength bolted part has a slope of more than 1:20, a beveled washer shall be used to compensate for the lack of parallelism. High strength bolted parts shall fit solidly together when assembled and shall not be separated by gaskets or any other interposed compressible materials. When assembled, all joint surfaces, including those adjacent to the washers, shall be free of scale except tight mill scale. They shall be free of dirt, loose scale, burrs, and other defects that would prevent solid seating of the parts. Contact surfaces within friction-type joints shall be free of oil, paint, lacquer or galvanizing.

All A325 and A354, Grade BC, bolts shall be tightened to a bolt tension not less than the proof load given in the applicable ASTM Specification for the type of bolt used. Tightening shall be done with properly calibrated wrenches or by the turn-of-nut method.

Bolts tightened by means of a calibrated wrench, shall be installed with a hardened washer under the nut or bolt head, whichever is the element turned in tightening. Hardened washers are not required when bolts are tightened by the turn-of-nut method.

1.23.6. Welded Construction. — Surfaces to be welded shall be free from loose scale, slag, rust, grease, paint and any other foreign material except that mill scale which withstands vigorous wire brushing may remain. Joint surfaces shall be free from fins and tears. Preparation of edges by gas cutting shall, wherever practicable, be done by a mechanically guided torch.

Parts to be fillet welded shall be brought in as close contact as practicable and in no event shall be separated by more than $\frac{3}{16}$ inch. If the separation is $\frac{1}{16}$ inch or greater, the size of the fillet welds shall be increased by the amount of the separation. The separation between faying surfaces of lap joints and butt joints on a backing structure shall not exceed $\frac{1}{16}$ inch. The fit of joints at contact surfaces which are not completely sealed by welds, shall be close enough to exclude water after painting.

Abutting parts to be butt welded shall be carefully aligned. Misalignments greater than $\frac{1}{8}$ inch shall be corrected and, in making the correction, the parts shall not be drawn into a sharper slope than 2 degrees ($\frac{1}{16}$ inch in 12 inches).

The work shall be positioned for flat welding whenever practicable.

In assembling and joining parts of a structure or of built-up members, the procedure and sequence of welding shall be such as will avoid needless distortion and minimize shrinkage stresses. Where it is impossible to avoid high residual stresses in the closing welds of a rigid assembly, such closing welds shall be made in compression elements.

In the fabrication of cover-plated beams and built-up members, all shop splices in each component part shall be made before such component part is welded to other parts of the member. Long girders or girder sections may be made by shop splicing not more than three sub-sections, each made in accordance with this paragraph.

All complete penetration butt welds made by manual welding, except when produced with the aid of backing material or welded in the flat position from both sides in square-edge material not more than $\frac{5}{16}$ inch thick with root opening not less than one-half the thickness of the thinner part joined, shall have the root of the initial layer gouged out on the back side before welding is started from that side, and shall be so welded as to secure sound metal and complete fusion throughout the entire cross-section. Butt welds made with use of a backing of the same material as the base metal shall have the weld metal thoroughly fused with the backing material. Backing strips may be removed by gouging or gas cutting after welding is completed, provided no injury is done to the base metal and weld metal and the weld metal surface is left flush or slightly convex with full throat thickness.

Butt welds shall be terminated at the ends of a joint in a manner that will ensure their soundness. Where possible, this should be done by use of extension bars or run-off plates. Extension bars or run-off plates, if used, shall be removed upon completion of the weld and the ends of the weld made smooth and flush with the abutting parts.

No welding shall be done when the ambient temperature is lower than 0°F.

Base metal shall be preheated as required to the temperature called for in Table 28-1.23.6 prior to tack welding or welding. When base metal not otherwise required to be preheated is at a temperature below 32°F, it shall be preheated to at least 70°F prior to tack welding or welding. Preheating shall bring the surface of the base metal within 3 inches of the point of welding to the specified preheat temperature, and this temperature shall be maintained as a minimum interpass temperature while welding is in progress. Minimum preheat and interpass temperatures shall be as specified in Table 28-1.23.6.

Where required, multiple-layer welds may be peened with light blows from a power hammer, using a round-nose tool. Peening shall be done after the weld has cooled to a temperature warm to the hand. Care shall be exercised to prevent scaling, or flaking of weld and base metal from overpeening.

1.23.8.1. Straightness. — Structural members consisting primarily of a single rolled shape shall, unless otherwise specified, be straight within the appropriate tolerances allowed by ASTM Specification A6-62T or as prescribed in the following paragraph. Built-up structural members fabricated by riveting or welding, unless otherwise specified, shall be straight within the tolerances allowed for wide flange shapes by ASTM Specification A6 or by the requirements of the following paragraph.

Compression members shall not deviate from straightness by more than 1/1000 of the axial length between points which are to be laterally supported.

Completed members shall be free from twists, bends and open joints. Sharp kinks or bends shall be cause for rejection of material.

1.23.8.2. Length. — A variation of $\frac{1}{32}$ inch is permissible in the overall length of members with both ends finished for contact bearing as in Sect. 28-1.23.7.

Members without ends finished for contact bearing, which are to be framed to other steel parts of the structure, may have a variation from the detailed length not greater than $\frac{1}{16}$ inch for members 30 feet or less in length, and not greater than $\frac{1}{8}$ inch for members over 30 feet in length.

Sect. 28-1.24A. Protection and Painting.

1.24.1. General Requirements. — Unless subjected to deteriorating conditions, otherwise specified, steelwork which will be concealed by interior building finish need not be painted; steelwork to be encased in concrete shall not be painted. Unless specifically exempted, all other steelwork shall be given one coat of shop paint, applied thoroughly and evenly to dry surfaces which have been cleaned in accordance with the following paragraph, by brush, spray, roller coating, flow coating, or dipping, at the election of the fabricator.

After inspection and approval and before leaving the shop, all steelwork specified to be painted shall be cleaned by hand-wire brushing, or by other methods elected by the fabricator, of loose mill scale, loose rust, weld slag or flux deposit, dirt and other foreign matter. Oil and grease deposits shall be removed by solvent. Steelwork specified to have no shop paint shall, after fabrication, be cleaned of oil or grease by solvent cleaners and be cleaned of dirt and other foreign material by thorough sweeping with a fiber brush.

The shop coat of paint is intended to protect the steel for only a short period of exposure, even if it is a primer for subsequent painting to be performed in the field by others.

1.24.2. Inaccessible Surfaces. — Surfaces inaccessible after assembly shall be treated in accordance with Sect. 28-1.24.1 before assembly.

1.24.3. Contact Surfaces. — Contact surfaces shall be cleaned in accordance with Sect. 28-1.24.1 before assembly but shall not be painted.

1.24.4. Finished Surfaces. — Machine finished surfaces shall be protected against corrosion by a rust-inhibiting coating that can be easily removed prior to erection or which has characteristics that make removal unnecessary prior to erection.

1.24.5. Surfaces Adjacent to Field Welds. — Unless otherwise provided, surfaces within two inches of any field weld location shall be free of materials that would prevent proper welding or produce objectionable fumes while welding is being done.

1.24.6A. — After erection and after touch-up of shop coat, steel, unless specifically exempted in this Section 28-1.24A, shall be given a field coat of approved metal protection of another color.

Primary frame steel built into exterior masonry walls shall have adequate protection against corrosion by encasing in one and one-half inches of Portland cement mortar or by a mastic asphalt or pitch one-eighth inch thick or its approved equivalent.

1.24.7A. Protection of Light Gage Steel Construction. — All individual structural members and assembled panels of light gage cold-formed steel construction, except where fabricated of approved corrosion-resistive steel, or of steel having a corrosion-resistive metallic or other approved coating, shall be protected against corrosion with an acceptable shop coat of paint, enamel, or other approved protection.

After erection where directly exposed to the weather, except when encased in concrete made of non-corrosive aggregates, or where fabricated of approved corrosion-resistive steel, or of galvanized or otherwise adequately protected steel, individual structural members and assembled panels of light gage cold-formed steel construction shall be given an additional coat of acceptable protection.

Exposed siding or sheathing shall be fabricated of approved corrosion-resistive steel or otherwise protected at the ground level for sufficient height above grade as determined by the depth of average snowfall (40 inches).

Floor or roof construction which extends into an exterior wall shall be adequately waterproofed and protected from the weather to prevent corrosion.

Sect. 28-1.25. Erection.

1.25.1. Bracing. — The frame of steel skeleton buildings shall be carried up true and plumb, and temporary bracing shall be introduced wherever necessary to take care of all loads to which the structure may be subjected, including equipment and the operation of same. Such bracing shall be left in place as long as may be required for safety.

Wherever piles of material, erection equipment or other loads are carried during erection, proper provision shall be made to take care of stresses resulting from such loads.

1.25.2. Adequacy of Temporary Connections. — As erection progresses, the work shall be securely bolted, or welded, to take care of all dead load, wind and erection stresses.

1.25.3. Alignment. — No riveting, permanent bolting or welding shall be done until as much of the structure as will be stiffened thereby has been properly aligned.

1.25.4. Field Welding. — Any shop paint on surfaces adjacent to joints to be field welded shall be wire brushed to reduce the paint film to a minimum.

Sect. 28-1.26A. Inspection.

1.26.1. General. — Material and workmanship at all times shall be subject to the inspection of experienced engineers representing the purchaser.

1.26.2. Cooperation. — All inspection as far as possible shall be made at the place of manufacture, and the contractor or manufacturer shall cooperate with the inspector, permitting access for inspection to all places where work is being done.

1.26.3. Rejections. — Material or workmanship not conforming to the provisions of this Code may be rejected at any time defects are found during the progress of the work.

1.26.4A. Inspection of Welding and High Strength Bolts. — The inspection of welding shall be performed in accordance with the provisions of the Standard Code for Welding in Building Construction, American Welding Society D1.0-63.

Inspection of high strength bolts shall be performed by a competent inspector qualified by experience and training and approved by the Building Commissioner and shall comply with the provisions of the 1962 Specifications For Structural Joints Using ASTM A-325 bolts.

1.26.5. Identification of High Strength Steels. — Steel which is used for main components and which is required to have a yield point greater than 36,000 psi shall, at all times in the fabricator's plant, be marked to identify its ASTM specification. Identification of such steel in completed members or assemblies shall be marked by painting the ASTM specification designation on the piece, over any shop coat of paint, prior to shipment from the fabricator's plant.

Sect. 28-1.27A. Open Web Steel Joists.

1.27.1. General. — Open Web Steel joists shall mean any open-webbed beam or truss, twenty-four inches or less in depth, produced directly by rolling, cold-forming or pressing. Joists may be fabricated from rolled, cold-formed or pressed shapes by welding, riveting or expanding.

Steel joists shall not be used in the first floor of a building where there is not a basement or cellar below, unless it has clearance above the ground of at least twenty-four inches, and the space below is ventilated either to a heated basement or to the outside air. Ventilation of such space to a heated basement shall consist of at least two remote openings in the basement wall having a total area of at least two square feet for each twenty-five linear feet of wall. Ventilation of such space to outside air shall consist of one or more openings in each exterior wall thereof, well distributed, except that openings need not be provided in the front wall when the space is ventilated in the rear and both side walls. The aggregate area of openings shall be not less than two square feet for each twenty-five linear feet of wall. Openings in exterior walls shall be protected by non-corrodible wire mesh with openings not greater than one-half inch.

1.27.2. Design. — The provisions of this Part for design and materials shall apply to Open Web Steel Joists. Steel members hot-rolled to shape shall be designed in accordance with the provisions of Sections 28-1.0 through 28-1.27A; steel members cold-formed to shape shall be designed in accordance with the provisions of Section 28-1.28A.

Where Open Web Steel Joists are used for other than simple spans under uniformly distributed loading their stresses shall be investigated and be limited to those allowed by this Part. Adequate top flange and lateral bracing shall be provided to support the joist in proper alignment under such loads.

The deflection due to design live load shall not exceed $1/360$ of the clear span for all floors and roofs where a plaster ceiling is attached or suspended, and $1/240$ of the clear span in all other cases.

1.27.3. End Bearing. — The ends of steel joists shall extend a distance of not less than 4 inches over masonry or concrete supports and not less than $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches over steel supports, except where opposite joists butt over a narrow steel support and positive attachment is made by welding or bolting, a shorter end bearing length may be used when the bearing stresses are within the allowable working stresses permitted in this Part.

1.27.4. Anchorage. — Joists resting on masonry or concrete supports shall be bedded in mortar and anchored thereto with an anchor equivalent to a $\frac{3}{8}$ -inch round steel bar not less than 8 inches long. Every joist in floors and roofs shall be anchored.

In roofs where parapet walls are not present, two $\frac{1}{2}$ -inch anchor bolts or other equal means shall be used in lieu of the steel bar. The ends of all steel joists resting on steel supports shall be positively attached thereto by either a minimum of two welds 1 inch long or one bolt $\frac{1}{2}$ inch diameter. If uplift forces are a consideration, the anchorage shall be capable of resisting such uplift forces.

1.27.5. Bridging. — Bridging shall be provided for steel joists to afford lateral support during and after erection and to distribute concentrations of live load among adjacent joists. Bridging shall be of approved rigid type. Attachment shall be by welding or mechanical means and shall be capable of resisting a horizontal force of not less than 500 pounds. The ratio of unbraced length to least radius of gyration (l/r) of the bridging member shall not exceed 300. Bridging shall be provided at intervals of not more than 7 feet for spans up to 21 feet, nor more than 8 feet for spans over 21 feet. where h = clear distance between flanges, inches

t = thickness of web, inches

Where a web consists of two or more sheets, the h/t ratio of the individual sheets shall not exceed.....150

1.28.2. Allowable Design Stresses. — The maximum allowable unit stresses to be used in design shall be as follows:

$$f_b = 0.6F_y$$

1.28.2.2. — Except as permitted by this section, allowable stresses shall be based upon the specified minimum properties of the plain material. Utilization, for design purposes, of any increase in material strength that results from a cold-forming operation is permissible provided the increase in strength obtains for the kind of stress, tension or compression, that is to be imposed on the final product in service; and under the limitations prescribed in this section.

1.28.2.3. — The provisions of Section 28–1.28.2.2 shall apply only to the following, regardless of whether the stress to be imposed on the member in service is tension or compression:

1. Axially loaded members, and flanges of flexural members, whose proportions are such that when treated as compression members the quantity Q , determined in accordance with the provisions of Section 28–1.28–2.10 is unity. This includes tubular members composed of flat elements.
2. Cylindrical tubular members in which the ratio D/t of mean diameter to wall thickness does not exceed $3,300,000/F_y$.

1.28.2.4. — Application of the provisions of Section 28–1.28.2.2 shall be on the following basis:

1. Application of the provisions of Section 28–1.28.2.2 shall be confined to the following:

2. The effect, on mechanical properties, of any welding that is to be applied to the member shall be determined on the basis of tests of full section specimens containing, within the gage length, such welding as the manufacturer intends to use. Any necessary allowance for such effect shall be made in the structural use of the member.

1.28.2.5. — Compression, f_c , in pounds per square inch, on a flat element stiffened at only one edge parallel to the direction of stress:

1. For w/t not greater than 10:

$$f_c = f_b$$

except when f_b exceeds 30,000 psi the maximum w/t ratio for which f_c may be taken equal to f_b shall not exceed

$$\frac{300,000}{f_b}$$

In the case of such higher values of f_b the allowable value of f_c for w/t ratio less than 10 but greater than the ratio established by this section shall be obtained by straightline interpolation is to be made between (1) the value of f_b at w/t as specified in this section and (2) $f_c = 30,000$ psi at w/t equal to 10.

2. For w/t greater than 10, but not greater than 25:

$$f_c = (1.667f_b - 8640) - (1/15)(f_b - 12,950)w/t$$

For steels with yield point in excess of 50,000 psi the value of f_b to be used for the determination of f_c when w/t exceeds 10 shall be 30,000 psi.

3. For w/t from 25 to 60:

$$\text{For Angle Struts: } f_c = 8,090,000/(w/t)^2$$

$$\text{For all Other Sections: } f_c = 20,000 - 282(w/t)$$

1.28.2.6. — To prevent lateral buckling, the maximum compression stress f'_c , in pounds per square inch, on extreme fibers of compression flanges or laterally unsupported straight I-, Z- or channel-shaped flexural members (not including multiple-web deck, U- and closed box-type members and curved of arch members), shall not exceed the allowable stress as specified in Sections 28-1.28.2 or 28-1.28.2.5 nor the following maximum stresses:

1. For I- or channel-shaped sections:

$$f'_c = \frac{10}{9} f_b - \frac{f_b^2}{907 \times 10^6} \left(\frac{l}{r_y} \right)^2$$

$$f'_c = 280,000,000 / (l/r_y)^2$$

2. For Z-shaped sections:

When l/r_y is greater than $7,100/\sqrt{f_b}$ but less than $15,900/f_b$:

$$f'_c = \frac{10}{9} f_b - \frac{f_b^2}{453 \times 10^6} \frac{l^2}{r_y}$$

When l/r_y is equal to or greater than $15,900/\sqrt{f_b}$:

$$f'_c = 140,000,000 / (l/r_y)^2$$

 l = the unbraced length of the member, inches. r_y = the radius of gyration of the entire section of the member about its gravity axis parallel to the web, inches.

1.28.2.7. — The maximum average shear stress, v , in pounds per square inch, on the gross area of the flat web of a beam shall not exceed:

$$v = \frac{64,000,000}{(h/t)^2} \quad \text{with a maximum of } \frac{2}{3} f_b$$

Where the web consists of two or more sheets, each sheet shall be considered as a separate member carrying its share of the shear.

1.28.2.8. — The compressive stress f_w in pounds per square inch in the flat web of a beam due to bending in its plane, shall not exceed f_b nor shall it exceed:

$$f_w = \frac{520,000,000}{(h/t)^2}$$

1.28.2.9. — For webs of beams subject to both bending and shear stresses, the member shall be so proportioned that such stresses do not exceed the allowable values specified in Sections 28-1.28.2.7 and 28-1.28.2.8 and that the quantity

$$(f'_b/f_w)^2 + (v'/v)^2 \text{ does not exceed unity}$$

where

$$f_w = \frac{520,000,000}{(h/t)^2}$$

$$v = \frac{64,000,000}{(h/t)^2}$$

 f'_b = actual compressive stress at junction of flange and web, psi. v' = actual average shear stress, i.e., shear force per web divided by web area, psi.

1.28.2.10. — The average axial stress, P/A , in compression members shall not exceed the values of F_a , as follows:

A = full, unreduced cross-sectional area of the member, sq. inches;

F_a = maximum allowable average axial stress in compression, psi;

l = unbraced length of member, inches; in frames which depend upon their own bending stiffness for lateral stability, the effective length l in the plane of the frame shall be determined by a rational method and shall not be less than the actual unbraced length.

r = radius of gyration of full, unreduced cross-section, inches;

F_y = yield point of steel, psi;

Q = a factor determined as follows:

1. For members composed entirely of stiffened elements, " Q " is the ratio between the effective design area, as determined from the effective design widths of such elements, and the full or gross area of the cross-section. The effective design area used in determining Q is to be based upon the basic design stress f_b as defined in Section 28-1.28.2.1.

2. For members composed entirely of unstiffened elements, " Q " is the ratio between the allowable compression stress f_c for the weakest element of the cross-section (the element having the largest flat-width ratio) and the basic design stress f_b ; where f_c is as defined in Section 1.28.2.5.

3. For members composed of both stiffened and unstiffened elements the basic design stress f_b ; where f_c is as defined in Section 28-1.28.2.5. factor " Q " is the product of a stress factor Q_s computed as outlined in paragraph (a) above and an area factor Q_a computed as outlined in paragraph (1) above, except that the stress upon which Q_a is to be based shall be that value of the unit stress f_c which is used in computing Q_s ; and the effective area to be used in computing Q_a shall include the full area of all unstiffened elements.

1.28.2.11. — Members subject to both axial compression and bending stresses shall be proportioned to meet the requirements of Section 28-1.6A with the exception that the value of F_a and F_b shall be determined in accordance with this section, and formula (7b) is to be used as shown here:

$$\frac{f_a}{0.515QF_y} + \frac{f'_b}{F_b}$$

shall not exceed unity (applicable only at braced points).

1.28.2.12. — The ratio, D/t , of mean diameter to wall thickness of a cylindrical tubular member in compression or bending shall not exceed $3,300,000/F_y$.

For compression members, the allowable unit stress, P/A , under axial load shall be prescribed by Section 28-1.28.2.10 with $Q = 1$.

1.28.3. Connections.

1.28.3.1. — The following requirements govern bolted connections of light gage steel structural members:

1. The clear distance between bolts which are arranged in rows parallel to the direction of force, also the distance from the center of any bolt to that end or other boundary of the connecting member towards which the pressure of the bolt is directed, shall not be less than $1\frac{1}{2}d$ nor less than $P/f_b t$.

where

d = diameter of bolt, inches

P = force transmitted by bolt, lb.

t = thickness of thinnest connected sheet, inches

f_b = basic design stress, as defined elsewhere, psi.

If the ratio of tensile strength to yield point is less than 1.35, a stress equal to the specified minimum tensile strength of the material divided by 2.2 shall be used instead of f_b in applying the provisions of this section.

2. The tension stress on the net section of a bolted connection shall not exceed f_b nor shall it exceed

where

s = spacing of bolts perpendicular to line of stress, inches. In the case of a single bolt, s = width of sheet.

d and f_b are as previously defined.

3. The bearing stress on the area $(d \times t)$ shall not exceed $3.5f_b$.

4. Shear on bolts, under dead and live load, shall not exceed the values given in Section 28-1.5.2A.

1.28.3.2. — For all grades of steel, fusion welds shall be proportioned so that the unit stresses therein do not exceed 13,600 psi in shear on the throat of fillet or plug welds. The allowable unit stress in tension or compression on butt welds shall be the same as prescribed for the base metal being joined, provided the weld penetrates 100 percent of the section. Stresses due to eccentricity of loading, if any, shall be combined with the primary stresses; and the combined unit stresses shall not exceed the values given above.

1.28.3.3. — In sheets joined by spot welding (including projection welding) the allowable shear per spot shall be as follows:

Thickness of Thinnest Out- side Sheet, In.	Allowable Shear Strength per Spot, lb.	Thickness of Thinnest Out- side Sheet, In.	Allowable Shear Strength per Spot, lb.
.010	50	.080	1075
.020	125	.094	1375
.030	225	.109	1650
.040	350	.125	2000
.050	525	.155	3000
.060	725	.185	4000

1.28.3.4. Protection. — Refer to Sect. 28-1.24.7A.

Sect. 28-1.29. Concrete-Filled Pipe Columns.

1.29.1. Material. — Pipe for such columns may have round, square, or rectangular cross sections.

Steel equal in quality to that described in Section 28-1.4 shall be used for pipe. Pipe shall be new and full size, shall be made by the seamless process or fully welded to develop equivalent strength. All pipe shall be mill tested and approved. Round pipe shall be standard weight or heavier. The wall thickness of square and rectangular pipe shall not be less than $\frac{3}{16}$ inch.

Filling shall be standard weight, machine-mixed, stone or gravel concrete and shall have a minimum compressive strength of 3,500 pounds per square inch when proportioned and tested by procedures described in Part 26. Concrete while being placed shall be compacted by a mechanical method which will ensure complete filling of the pipe with dense concrete of homogeneous quality.

Bases, caps, web ties, brackets and shear heads shall be of steel meeting the requirements of ASTM Standards A373-58T, A7-61T or A36-62T. Such fixtures and their attachments to the pipe and reinforcement shall be such as to ensure that the allowable stresses, under the maximum conditions of loading, are not exceeded.

Longitudinal steel having a yield point approximating that of the pipe may be used to increase the strength of the columns. Such steel shall be new, straight and continuous for the entire length of the column with ends so detailed as to develop the computed stress. The ends of such steel shall be arranged for even bearing with the pipe and milled after filling if necessary to obtain uniform bearing. The strength of this reinforcement shall be calculated by adding its area to the area of the steel pipe and including it in the calculations.

Material surrounding a filled pipe column for fire protection shall not be considered as either load-bearing or as increasing the stiffness.

1.29.2. Design.

1.29.2.1. — The axial load P_a shall not exceed that obtained from Formulas (1) and (2), Section 28-1.5.1.3A multiplied by the effective transformed area A_{tr} and with P_a substituted for F_a and r_{tr}^2 substituted for r^2 . The values of A_{tr} and r_{tr}^2 shall be evaluated by

$$A_{tr} = A_s + \frac{A_c}{2n} \qquad r_{tr}^2 = \frac{I_s + \frac{I_c}{2n}}{A_{tr}}$$

in which

A_s = area of the pipe and reinforcing steel

A_c = area of the concrete filling

I_c = moment of inertia of the concrete filling

I_s = moment of inertia of steel pipe and reinforcing

$$n = \frac{E}{E_c} = \frac{E}{60,000\sqrt{f'_c}} = \frac{483}{\sqrt{f'_c}}$$ f'_c = concrete compressive strength, psi

1.29.2.2. — The computed bending moment in columns shall take account of the effect of the axial load on the deflection including the deflection induced by the axial load itself. This moment M_r may be approximated by

$$M_r = \frac{C_m M}{1 - \frac{P_c(l/r_t)^2}{149,000,000A_c}} \quad \text{Formula (27)}$$

in which C_m shall be evaluated in accordance with Section 28-1.6.1A with P_c substituted for f_a and P_a substituted for F_a .

M = bending moment neglecting the effect of the axial load on the deflection.

P_c = applied axial load

At braced points M_r may be taken equal to M .

1.29.2.3. — Provided that no part of the concrete filling is stressed in tension, columns subjected to bending as well as axial load shall be so proportioned that in which f_b is the compressive bending stress based on the moment given by Formula 27 — at the point under consideration. The above expression applies directly to columns flexed about one principal axis and to round columns. In the latter case moments acting about several axes shall be added vectorily and f_b obtained from the resultant moment. For square and rectangular columns the second (bending) term shall be treated as

$$\frac{f_{bx} + f_{by}}{21,000}$$

At braced points P_a in the above formula may be computed for $\frac{Kl_b}{r_{tr}} = 0$ and $C_m = 1$.

1.29.2.4. — If bending is sufficient to cause net tension at some point in the concrete fill the column shall be so proportioned that

s = kern distance for the uncracked section = $\frac{r_{tr}^2}{c}$

c = distance from centroid to extreme fiber

M_o = allowable moment with $P_c = 0$ which can be approximated as $21,000S$ in which S is the section modulus of the pipe and reinforcing steel alone

The above expression applies to columns flexed about one principal axis and to round columns. In the latter case moments acting about several axes shall be added vectorially to obtain the resultant moment.

For square or rectangular columns with bending about both principal axes, the section shall be so proportioned that where the subscripts x and y indicate that the quantity is computed with respect to the x or y axis independently and $P_{bmin.}$ is the smaller of P_{bx} and P_{by} .

1.29.3. Tests. — Copies of sanction tests of filled pipe columns subjected to axial loads made in accordance with this section shall be filed with the Commissioner for each size of column produced by a manufacturer. These tests shall be made on specimens the length of which approximates 24 times the smallest outside dimension of the pipe. Tests shall be made in an approved laboratory. For acceptance the ratio of the test strength to P_a shall not be less than the factor of safety in Formulas (1) and (2), modified as in 1.29a.2.1 above excepting that in computing P_a for sanction tests n rather than $2n$ shall be used.

1.29.4. Identification. — Columns shall be labeled with manufacturer's name and date of manufacture.

Sect. 28-1.30A. Cast-Iron Columns.

1.30.1. — Cast-iron columns shall not be used in the primary structural frames of buildings the height of which exceeds one hundred feet or twice the width at the ground level. Cast iron shall not be used for columns required to have four-hour fire-resistive protection.

1.30.2. — The ends of cast-iron columns shall be machined to a smooth plane surface perpendicular to the axis to provide full bearing for the entire cross section of the column.

1.30.3. — Hollow cast-iron columns, except when open at both ends and without flanges, shall have two three-eighths inch holes drilled in the shell to exhibit the thickness thereof. If the columns are cast on the side, both holes shall be at mid-height at ninety degrees from one another about the axis of the column. Additional holes shall be drilled when required by the Commissioner. If the core of a cast-iron column is found to have shifted more than one-quarter the thickness of the shell, the strength shall be computed assuming the thickness all around to be that of the thinnest part.

1.30.4. — Cast-iron columns shall not be smaller than six inches in outside diameter or side, and the thickness of metal shall not be less than three-fourths inch or less than one-twelfth the outside diameter or widest side.

1.30.5. — Cast-iron columns supporting a floor shall not be longer than seventy times the least radius of gyration or twenty-four times the outside diameter or least side. Cast-iron columns supporting roof loads only shall not be longer than ninety-six times the least radius of gyration or thirty times the outside diameter or least side.

1.30.6. — Cast-iron columns shall not be used where the loading is so eccentric as to cause tension, nor shall they be used in garages or other structures where they may be subject to impact from vehicles.

Sect. 28-2.0. Plastic Design.

Sect. 28-2.1A. Scope. — Subject to the limitations contained herein, simple or continuous beams, one and two-story rigid frames classified as Class A construction in Sect. 28-1.2A and similar portions of structures rigidly constructed so as to be continuous over at least one interior support,* may be proportioned on the basis of plastic design, i.e., of their maximum strength. This strength, as determined by rational analysis, shall not be less than that required to support 1.70 times the given live load and dead load for simple and continuous beams. For continuous frames it shall not be less than 1.85 times the given live load and dead load, nor 1.40 times these loads acting in conjunction with 1.40 times any specified wind or earthquake forces.

Connections joining a portion of a structure designed on the basis of plastic behavior with a portion not so designed need be no more rigid than ordinary seat-and-cap angle or standard web connections.

Where plastic design is used as the basis for proportioning continuous beams and structural frames, the provisions relating to allowable working stress, contained in Sects. 28-1.0 through 28.1.26.5 are waived. Except as modified by these rules, however, all other pertinent provisions of these Sections shall govern.

Crane runways shall not be designed continuous over interior vertical supports on the basis of maximum strength. However, rigid frame bents supporting crane runways may be considered as coming within the scope of the rules.

Steel for Bridges and Buildings, ASTM A7-61T

Structural Steel for Welding, ASTM A373-58T

Structural Steel, ASTM A36-62T

Sect. 28-2.3. Columns. — In the plane of bending of columns which would develop a plastic hinge at ultimate loading, the slenderness ratio l/r shall not exceed 120, l being taken as the distance center-to-center of adjacent members connecting to the column or the distance from such a member to the base of the column. The slenderness ratio of columns covered by Formula (21) shall not exceed 100. The maximum axial load P at ultimate loading shall not exceed $0.6P_y$, where P_y is the product of yield point stress times column area.

Columns in continuous frames, where sidesway is not prevented (a) by diagonal bracing, (b) by attachment to an adjacent structure having ample lateral stability or (c) by floor slabs or roof decks secured horizontally by walls or bracing systems parallel to the plane of the continuous frames, shall be so proportioned that

Except as otherwise provided in this section, M_o/M_p , the ratio of allowable end moment to the full plastic bending strength of columns and other axially loaded members, shall not exceed the value given by the following formulas, where they are applicable:

Case I. — For columns bent in double curvature by moments producing plastic hinges at both ends of the columns

$$M_o = M_p \quad \text{when } P/P_y \leq 0.15$$

Case II. — For pin-based columns required to develop a hinge at one end only, and double curvature columns required to develop a hinge at one end when the moment at the other end would be less than the hinge value the numerical values for B and G , for any given slenderness ratio in the plane of bending l/r , being those listed in Tables 4-33 and 4-36. Where l/r in the plane of bending is less than 60, and P/P_y does not exceed 0.15, the full plastic strength of the member may be used ($M_o = M_p$).

Case III. — For columns bent in single curvature

the numerical values for H and J being those given in Tables 5-33 and 5-36.

In no case shall the ratio of axial load to plastic load exceed that given by the following expression:

where l and r are the unbraced length and radius of gyration of the column in the plane normal to that of the continuous frame under consideration.

Sect. 28-2.4. Shear. — Unless reinforced by diagonal stiffeners or a doubler plate, the webs of columns, beams, and girders shall be so proportioned that where V_u is the shear, in kips, that would be produced by the required ultimate loading, d is the depth of the member, and w is its web thickness.

(Shear stresses are generally high within the boundaries of the connection of two or more members whose webs lie in a common plane. The foregoing provisions will be satisfied, without reinforcing the web within the connection, when its thickness w , in inches, is greater than $23,000M/A_{bc}F_y$, M being the algebraic sum of clockwise and counter-clockwise moment (in kip-feet) applied on opposite sides of the connection web boundary, and A_{bc} the planar area of the connection web, expressed in square inches, and F_y is given in pounds per square inch. When the thickness of this web is less than that given by the above formula the deficiency may be compensated by a pair of diagonal stiffeners or by a reinforcing plate in contact with the web over the connection area.)

Sect. 28-2.5. Web Crippling. — Web stiffeners are required on a member at a point of load application where a plastic hinge would form.

At points on a member where the concentrated load delivered by the flanges of a member framing into it would produce web crippling opposite the compression flange or high tensile stress in the connection of the tension flange, web stiffeners are required opposite the compression flange when $w < \frac{A_f}{t_b + 5k}$ opposite the tension flange when $t_f < 0.4\sqrt{A_f}$

where

w = thickness of web to be stiffened k = distance from outer face of flange to web toe of fillet of member to be stiffened

t_f = thickness of flange of member to be stiffened

t_b = thickness of flange delivering concentrated load

A_f = area of flange delivering concentrated load

The area of such stiffeners, A_{st} , shall be such that

$$A_{st} \geq A_f - w(t_b + 5k)$$

Their ends shall be fully welded to the inside face of the flange opposite the concentrated tensile load. They may be fitted against the inside face of the flange opposite the concentrated compression load. When the concentrated load delivered by a beam occurs on one side only, the web stiffener need not exceed one-half the depth of the member, but the welding connecting it to the web shall be sufficient to develop $F_y A_{st}$.

Sect. 28-2.6. Minimum Thickness (Width-Thickness Ratios). — Projecting elements that would be subjected to compression involving plastic hinge rotation under ultimate loading, shall have width-thickness ratios no greater than the following:

Flanges of rolled shapes and flange plates of similar built-up shapes: $8\frac{1}{2}$, except that for rolled shapes an upward variation of 3 percent may be tolerated. The thickness of sloping flanges may be taken as their average thickness. Stiffeners and that portion of flange plates in box sections and cover plates included between the free edge and the first longitudinal row of fasteners or connecting welds: $8\frac{1}{2}$.

The width-thickness ratio of flange plates in box sections and flange cover plates included between longitudinal lines of connecting rivets, high strength bolts or welds, shall not exceed 32.

The depth-thickness ratio of beam and girder webs subjected to plastic bending without axial loading shall not exceed 70 and, when subjected to combined axial force and plastic bending moment at ultimate loading, the value given by the formula with a minimum value of 43.

Sect. 28-2.7. Connections. — All connections, the rigidity of which is essential to the continuity assumed as the basis of the design analysis, shall be capable of resisting the moments, shears and axial loads to which they would be subjected by the ultimate loading.

Corner connections (haunches), tapered or curved for architectural reasons, shall be so proportioned that the full plastic bending strength of the section adjacent to the connection can be developed, if required.

Stiffeners shall be used, as required, to preserve the flange continuity of interrupted members at their junction with other members in a continuous frame. Such stiffeners shall be placed in pairs on opposite sides of the web of the member which extends continuously through the joint.

Rivets, welds and A307 bolts shall be proportioned to resist the forces produced at ultimate load using unit stresses equal to 1.67 times those given in Sects. 28-1.16A and 28-1.17.

In general, groove welds are preferable to fillet welds, but their use is not mandatory when the strength of the latter at 1.67 times the stress given in Sect. 28-1.17 is sufficient to resist the ultimate load imposed upon a joint.

High strength bolts may be proportioned, on the basis of their minimum guaranteed proof load, to resist the tension produced by the ultimate loading. When used to transmit shear produced by the ultimate loading, one bolt may be substituted for a rivet of the same nominal diameter. High strength bolts may be used in joints having painted contact surfaces when these joints are of such size that the slip required to produce bearing would not interfere with the formation, at ultimate loading, of the plastic hinges assumed in the design.

Sect. 28-2.8A. Lateral Bracing. — Members designed on the basis of ultimate load shall be adequately braced to resist lateral and torsional displacements at the plastic hinge locations associated with the failure mechanism. The laterally unsupported distance, l_{cr} , from such braced hinge locations to similarly braced adjacent points on the member or frame shall not exceed except that it need not be less than $35r_y$

where

r_y = the radius of gyration of the member about its weak axis
 M = the lesser of the moments at the ends of the unbraced segment
 and

M/M_p , the end moment ratio, is positive when the segment is bent in single curvature and negative when bent in double curvature.

Any greater laterally unbraced length for these segments must be justified by an analysis based upon the predictable amount of restraint present at the ends of the segment in the plane of the computed bending moments.

The foregoing provisions need not apply in the region of the last hinge to form in the failure mechanism assumed as the basis for proportioning a given member, nor in members oriented with their weak axis normal to the plane of bending. However, in the region of the last hinge to form, and in regions not adjacent to a plastic hinge, the maximum distance between points of lateral support shall be such as to satisfy the requirements of Formulas (4), (5A), (5B) and (6) in Sections 28-1.0 through 28-1.26.5 of this Specification. For this case the value of f_a and f_b shall be computed from the moment and axial force at ultimate loading, divided by the applicable load factor.

Members built into a masonry wall and having their web perpendicular to this wall can be assumed to be laterally supported with respect to their weak axis of bending.

Sect. 28-2.9. Fabrication. — The provisions of Sects. 1.7.5 through 1.26.5 with respect to workmanship shall govern the fabrication of structures, or portions of structures, designed on the basis of maximum strength, subject to the following limitations:

The use of sheared edges shall be avoided in locations subject to plastic hinge rotation at ultimate loading. If used, they shall be finished smooth by grinding, chipping or planing.

In locations subject to plastic hinge rotation at ultimate loading, holes for rivets or bolts in the tension area shall be subpunched and reamed or drilled full size.

FAVORING LEGISLATION RE TOTAL OR PARTIAL DISABILITY OR DEATH RE CERTAIN EMPLOYEES OF BOSTON CITY HOSPITAL.

Coun. TIERNEY offered the following:

Resolved, That the City Council of Boston favors the consideration by the Legislature of the petition now held under Joint Rule 7B, providing that a certain Physical Condition or Disease resulting in Total or Partial Disability or Death to certain Employees of the Boston City Hospital shall be presumed to have been suffered in line of duty, with reference to the accidental disability retirement law; provided that any such legislation enacted includes a referendum to the Mayor and City Council.

The resolution was adopted under suspension of the rules.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON URBAN REDEVELOPMENT, REHABILITATION AND RENEWAL.

Coun. McDONOUGH, for the Committee on Urban Redevelopment, Rehabilitation and Renewal, submitted the following:

1. Report on message of the Mayor and resolution (referred September 16) approving early disposition of Parcel 12 in Government Center Project Area—recommending that the resolution be adopted.

The report of the committee was accepted, the resolution was adopted.

MINORITY REPORT OF COUNCILLOR PIEMONTE RE EARLY DISPOSITION OF PARCEL 12 GOVERNMENT CENTER PROJECT AREA.

I would like the record to show that this was referred by the Mayor's office to the Boston City Council on September 16, 1963. The following week was the election week, the date today is October 7, 1963. The hearing was held on this matter last week. At the hearing it developed, and the record will show, that as recent as October 1, which is subsequent to the date we received this resolve, changes have been made into the agreement. Notwithstanding all that, notwithstanding the fact that the proposed developer stated he had only seen the amended agreement within the past few days, that his attorney had only seen it within that time, the fact that the committee has made its report shows the speed with which the committee and the Council have acted.

The record will also show the proposal was made in February of this year. Yet it was not until September 23, that the Redevelopment Authority sent anything to the Council and only after action taken by the Council requesting that the Mayor expedite this matter.

This hearing has brought out even as of this date the Boston Redevelopment fails to include in its proposal for redevelopment projects any formula which assures any prospective developer that he would get the same treatment as anyone else with respect to assessments or payments in lieu of taxes.

As a matter of fact, the hearing in this particular case brought out that the developer received 11,000 additional square feet of land for $7,000 or 77 cents a square foot, as compared with the $12 a square foot that he paid for the entire parcel. The record will show his proposal said he was willing to pay $14 per square foot.

So the record might be as full as possible, it is well to note that on these 7,000 additional feet the city has an easement, as I understand it, for a passageway over which the developer intends to build.

Placed on file.

The question came on the adoption of the foregoing resolution, and the resolution was adopted, yeas 9, nays 0.

Research Bureau Studies Effect of Legislative Action on Boston Finances

(Bureau Brief, published by the Municipal Research Bureau, offers the following survey of legislative actions which can be reflected in Boston's financial picture.)

Five laws passed by the 1963 Legislature which can make a serious impression on Boston's finances are reviewed.

Boston can benefit more from the windfall from accelerated collection of state income and corporation taxes by not using it for day to day purposes.

The city's windfall is estimated at $4.1 million in 1964 and $1.0 million in 1965.

The new schedule of equalized valuations should bring the city about $1.5 million more in school foundation aid in 1965.

Boston's proportion of Metropolitan Parks District expense assessments will be lower as a result of the same law.

The earliest Boston can expect benefits from the change in the law for state aid for libraries will be 1965.

Repeal of welfare settlement laws should mean eventual savings of $150,000 in personnel costs.

Since midyear, the 1963 Legislature passed several laws which can have considerable impact on Boston's finances. This Bureau Brief reviews five.

Whether their effects will be generally beneficial is uncertain at present and will depend in some part on the city's own actions.

Revenue Windfall

For example, one new law provides for accelerated collection of state income and corporation taxes with an attendant windfall which could tempt the city into a fiscal pitfall. Windfall means unexpected good fortune and implies that the good fortune is temporary.

It is estimated that Boston's share will be $4.1 million in 1964 and $1.0 million in 1965. If the city uses the 1964 amount to pay for day to day operating expenses, or increases its spending by this amount, it would have to find $3.1 million in 1965 and the full $4.1 million annually thereafter to offset the use of temporary revenue for 1964 spending. The alternatives

Ave Atque Val

As in the rest of the nation, indeed, through the rest of the world, the shock came without warning to Boston.

At first it was numbing—the sort of numbing that even deadened the capacity to hope. And then as the mind sought to seek some understanding of news beyond comprehension, the blow fell, killing hope aborning.

John Fitzgerald Kennedy was dead.

On the wings of modern means of communication in the days and hours that followed, the story of that tragic November day in Dallas, Texas, sped 'round the world.

Nowhere was the sorrow more deep; the sense of loss more soul-stirring than in Boston, the city that was his own.

For Boston his memory will live forever.

would be to reduce future spending by the windfall amount or to raise property taxes by the same amount.

Fiscal prudence suggests that the windfalls be used in lieu of borrowing for nonrecurring purposes such as capital improvements. The importance of proper use of this revenue is accentuated by the possible effects of the next law discussed.

Equalized Valuations

The second of these laws establishes a new schedule of equalization and apportionment or a new basis for the state to make major distributions of income and corporation taxes to cities and towns. The new schedule takes effect in 1965 and reduces Boston's proportion of any distributions made on the basis of equalized valuations from 20.739 per cent to 15.008 per cent.

Meanwhile, the law prevents the city from getting more in 1964 than it got in 1963 except for the windfall. It also insures that the city will get no less in 1965 than it actually received in 1963 from the distribution of state-shared taxes.

But since the law also means that more of the income tax will be given back to cities and towns on the basis of education or so-called school foundation formula, Boston will get about $1.5 million more than before on this basis. The city will also benefit from the reduction in its proportion of the assessment of Metropolitan Parks District expenses.

Come 1966, however, it is possible that Boston may get less than in 1965 from whatever distribution is made of these taxes based on equalized valuations. This would depend on the growth in the yields of the income and corporation taxes.

Aid for Libraries

A third law involves state aid for libraries and its source of funds. In 1960, state aid for libraries amounting to 25 cents per person—$175,000 for Boston—was authorized to be paid from the proceeds of the income tax. In other words, the total cost of $1.3 million was paid from monies that came back to cities and towns anyway.

The new law provides for the state aid to come from the State's General Fund. Thus, it makes $1.3 million more available to be given back to communities on the basis of equalized valuations.

There will be no apparent benefit to Boston in 1964, however, since the distribution of income and corporation taxes on the equalized valuation basis is limited to the amount distributed in 1963. But in 1965, Boston might get $200,000—15 per cent of the $1.3 million—if there are sufficient income tax monies to pay for the added cost of school foundation aid and if the amount of income tax distributed on the basis of equalized valuations is at least $1.3 million more than was actually distributed on the same basis in 1963.

Settlement Eliminated

Two new laws have eliminated legal settlement (5 years' residence) in determining a city's liability for the expense of recipients of Old Age Assistance and General Relief. Previously, for example, if a person applying for Old Age Assistance or General Relief did not have legal settlement in the city, the community in which the applicant had settlement, or the state in unsettled cases, reimbursed the city for its expense on behalf of such an applicant.

The settlement requirement forced Boston to maintain a large force of personnel to investigate the question of individual settlement. Irrespective of settlement, beginning in 1964, the city will be liable for the expense of these welfare applicants.

In return, the state will reimburse the city for 20 per cent of the costs of all General Relief cases. The state has had responsibility only for total costs of unsettled cases. It will reimburse the city for 70 per cent of the difference between total cost of OAA cases and the federal reimbursement for all OAA cases. The state's share is now two thirds of the difference in settled cases and the entire difference in unsettled cases.

Major savings to the city, however, will only amount to about $150,000 and will come as attrition reduces the number of persons engaged in settlement investigation in the Welfare Department.

ACTION—At the recent mouth check program carried out at Boston City Hospital in behalf of city and county workers, another big phase of the hospital's war on cancer was recorded. Here's a general view of the examination area. More than 1,200 men and women availed themselves of the opportunity to undergo the check.

WELFARE COSTS FOR OCTOBER

Following is a summary of the Welfare Department for October:

The $4,260,906 spent during the month of October in behalf of 29,198 persons and families, represents a total cost increase of $299,238 or 7.6 per cent. Average payments rose from $137.23 to $145.59. This expanding budget reflects both the finalizing of adjustments required by the 5.1 per cent rise in the cost of living index and soaring per diem hospital costs. With 1,447 approvals and 1,295 closings, there was an over-all net increase of 152 cases. In addition to this activity there were 344 requests for assistance denied.

Old Age Assistance: October expenditures for Old Age Assistance were $1,167,663, an increase over September of 8.5 per cent or $91,432. This money provided care for 11,601 clients at an average cost of $100.23. With 152 closings offset by 179 approvals, a net increase of 27 cases resulted.

Medical Assistance for Aged: Because costs in this category reflect not budgeted needs but rather medical expenses, the 2.2 per cent rise this month to $908.218 is due primarily to advancing hospital rates rather than being geared to the cost of living index. Average case costs of 4,814 clients was $188.48. Nearly 30 per cent of applications received were rejected because of sufficient income, excess savings or voluntary withdrawal.

Aid to Families with Dependent Children: The 7,428 families participating in the program accounted for an expenditure of $1,485,784, a $199.89 average case cost. This represents a 10.2 per cent increase of $137,508 expended in behalf of 7,280 adults and 22,356 children. Approval was given to 407 requests for assistance, 58 applications were rejected and 343 cases were closed, a net increase of 64 cases.

Disability Assistance: The static nature of this category continues to be apparent. During the month 146 approvals were nearly matched by 142 closings. Higher budgets and medical expenses brought a rise in over-all costs to $510,166 with an average payment of $155.62 being disbursed among 3,277 disabled persons. More than half of the 77 applicants rejected failed to meet the requirements of the State Medical Review Team.

General Relief: This was the only category showing a decrease in caseload. Although 384 persons were added to the rolls, 430 cases were closed for a net reduction of 46 cases. Costs of the program, however, rose 21.8 per cent because General Relief payments are on a weekly not a semimonthly basis — with October being a 5-week month. Average expenditures for 2,078 clients were $89.56 for a total outlay of $189,075.

CONFERENCE ON AUTOMATION AND ITS CATASTROPHIC EF- FECTS ON EMPLOYMENT

DEAR MAYOR COLLINS:

With your approval I attended a joint conference of industry, union management, economists, and thirty of the leading public welfare administrators in the United States. The conference was held in response to serious questions raised by public welfare administrators relating to automation and its catastrophic effect on employment through the United States.

It is becoming increasingly evident that as more and more industry is automated problems of unemployment are rising and regrettably the unemployed class or the class that is automated out of jobs are persons of no or little skills and cannot find other employment. It has been firmly established that upgrading of employment required by automation cannot absorb the untrained or unskilled worker. Before we know it, the declining availability of jobs will be a peril to our country and will create tremendous welfare problems. Hence, now is the time to take action to try and head off some disaster. The questions we as welfare administrators raised were whether or not local welfare departments had a basic responsibility for the solution of unemployment caused by technological automation and how welfare departments fit into the picture and whether or not we had more responsibility than the granting of financial aid, case-work services and referrals to other agencies, and furthermore, should welfare departments be responsible for education and training of unemployed.

It developed in the conference that perhaps because of organizational structures in the various communities that the situation must be approached from many viewpoints. In Massachusetts, because of our structural separated functions for Welfare, Education, and Health, this probably would be an educational responsibility. In any event, it is a problem to be discussed seriously but it is expected that guidance will come from the federal government authorities inasmuch as it was unanimously agreed that a commission must be created at once by the federal government to work out a suitable solution, the most promising of which would be an extension of either Social Security or private insurance plans to assure retraining in the event of lack of employment because the skills possessed were no longer usable. There has to be a recognition of the problem and the assumption by a capable agency and we as welfare directors were assured that the situation would be promptly and directly brought to the attention of the President and this assurance was given as a joint venture by industry, unions and welfare authorities.

The conference was most instructive and I am sure of great value to me as a welfare director inasmuch as I am aware of many of the intricacies of future possibilities, and I am grateful for the opportunity of attending the conference.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM F. LALLY,
Director.

Photographer Cecil Beaton took pictures of Queen Mother Elizabeth on her 50th birthday. In an extravagance of tact, Beaton sent her proofs so retouched that not a wrinkle showed. Her secretary returned them with a polite note that said in effect:

"Her Majesty feels that, having weathered 50 years of life on earth, she would not like her photographs to suggest that she has come through completely unscathed."

Report on Attendance at Twelfth National Conference on Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support Held at Providence, Rhode Island, September 3—6, 1963.

This conference was sponsored by the Rhode Island Commission on Interstate Cooperation in cooperation with the Rhode Island Department of Social Welfare, the Rhode Island Family and Juvenile Court, and the Council of State Governments.

This conference is what is better known as a working conference, and consisted of a series of workshop meetings. The delegates were seated at tables at which were placed the conference reports, the agenda, and working material.

Each meeting was presided over by a chairman, who took up the agenda items for the meeting in a businesslike and orderly fashion. Each item on the agenda was previously submitted by a delegate. All members of the conference were invited to take part in the discussion and most of them did.

The session on administrative problems brought out some interesting information on how certain states handle their Uniform Reciprocal Enforcement of Support (URESA) cases.

Mr. Robert C. V. Killian, Supervisor of Collections, Family Court, Providence, Rhode Island, outlined the history of his court, which is unique in this country. All cases which affect the marital relationship in any manner, civil or criminal, are handled by this court. Within this court is a bureau of collections, and in the short space of one year 3,600 URESA cases have been processed. The justices of this court have given Mr. Killian broad powers, one of which is to issue and discharge summonses.

Mr. Killian has set up a collection card system which is checked by his staff twice each month. Any time the respondent's arrearages reach $100, he is notified by summons to appear at Mr. Killian's office. More often than not Mr. Killian gets a call from the worried husband or father, seeking information as to what it is all about. He is briefly told why he has been summonsed and is further advised that if he wants to successfully adjust the matter, he is to appear within a specified number of days and bring a substantial payment on his arrearages with him. Otherwise he can tell his story to a judge. The man usually appears and brings the requested payment.

It is a uniform policy of this Family Court to deal harshly with these non-providers.

The Supervisor of Collections has been empowered by the court to dismiss the summons without further court action if he is able to resolve the matter before him.

This year the $1,000,000 mark in collections will be surpassed.

Attorney Rosenblatt, Counsel, attached to the Registration and Location Bureau of the New York State Department of Social Welfare, reported that the New York location registry established last year is moving ahead very well. All welfare districts are using the bureau services and they are getting 30 per cent positive results in locating absconding husbands and fathers. They offer their services to all states if there are children involved. In one case they were quickly able to locate a deserter for the State of Washington. It seemed that Washington had no information other than that he was reported to be in the vicinity of Westchester County, New York. An inquiry with the Department of Corrections revealed that he recently applied for a job in a liquor establishment and had to register with the Correction Department as required by law. His address was procured and forwarded to the State of Washington, which resulted in his being placed under a court order to support his three children.

Another agenda item of interest discussed at length was the registration of court decrees in foreign states. It was the consensus of opinion that in the years to come this is going to be a common method of getting expeditious action against deserters.

It enables the wife and mother to cut deeply through the red tape involved in starting a new URESA action in each state where the absconder is located with its attending delays. The petitioner can get a certified copy of the decree of divorce and order, and register it in the state where she believes her husband to be. Once it is confirmed in the responding state, it has the force and effect of an order that has been entered in that state, and can be enforced there forthwith. It can be amended, modified, and changed. The good effect is that it puts the burden upon the defendant to take affirmative action to have it changed or modified.

Many other agenda items were fully explored, covering support from persons in the armed forces, proposed federal jurisdiction over nonsupport cases, reciprocity with foreign nations, ways in which the National Conference may furnish more active leadership in the improvement of reciprocal support activities, and modernization of laws relating to desertion, nonsupport and family services.

Respectfully submitted,
J. A. DE MARCO,
Administrative Assistant—Legal.

REPORT ON MASSACHUSETTS MUNICIPAL AUDITORS AND ACCOUNTANTS ASSOCIATION

DEAR MR. MAYOR:

As a member of the staff of the Auditing Department, I attended the fall meeting of the Massachusetts Municipal Auditors and Accountants Association held at Jug End Barn, South Egremont, Mass., on October 14, and 15, 1963.

A very interesting and informative program relative to municipal accounting and finance was presented.

Mr. Murray Adams, President of the Association, presided at the opening session. The first speaker was Edward C. Wilson, Associate Commissioner of State Department of Corporation and Taxation, who discussed Income and Corporation Taxation and the Problems of the New Method of Handling the Motor Vehicle Excise Tax. Mr. Arthur H. MacKinnon, Director of State Bureau of Accounts, then reviewed current legislation pertaining to Massachusetts municipalities.

The afternoon session was on School Building Assistance, and the speaker was Mr. William Curley of the State Building Assistance Commission.

The final session on October 15 commenced with a panel discussion of the various legal aspects relative to contracts. The members of the panel were: Mr. Leonard McDonald, City Auditor, Everett; Mr. Frank Harron, City Auditor, Peabody, and Mr. James Costello, Town Accountant, Winchester, Mass. The conference closed with a question and answer period conducted by Mr. MacKinnon.

The entire conference was most interesting and educational.

Respectfully yours,

EDWIN J. SULLIVAN.

EXTENSION OF CONTRACTS

The Mayor has approved the extension of the time limit on completion of the following contracts:

Contract with Sellars Oil Burner Service, Inc., for furnishing and installing new boilers and new oil burning equipment at the Samuel Adams School, extended from September 6, 1963, to November 6, 1963, because of delay in delivery of boilers.

Contract with National Floors Company for resurfacing and refinishing wood floors in various schools in Area A, extended from July 30, 1963, to October 31, 1963, because of difficulty in obtaining competent mechanics to complete work.

PARKS AND RECREATION DEPARTMENT.

Contract with Hartstone Construction Corporation for addition to clubhouse, Franklin Park Golf Course, extended to July 17, 1963.

Ambition vs. Anger

A newly elected member was sitting in the House of Commons smoking room when Winston Churchill, with clouded brow, ambled in and sat down in a nearby chair. For a long time the old man brooded in silence, then suddenly gave his neighbor a sharp look. "Young man," he growled, "I suppose you've wondered sometimes what on earth it was that got me into politics?" The nervous young man answered shyly that he would indeed like to know. "Ambition, young man! Sheer, naked ambition!" He relaxed into his brooding, then growled again, "And what do you think has kept me in politics all these years? Anger! Sheer, naked anger!" With that the Prime Minister rose and shuffled out again.

Proceedings of City Council.

Monday, October 14, 1963.

Regular meeting of the City Council held in the Council Chamber, at 2 P.M., President HINES in the chair and all the members present.

The Right Reverend Christopher P. Griffin, chaplain of the City Council, was escorted to the rostrum.

INVOCATION BY THE RIGHT REVEREND CHRISTOPHER P. GRIFFIN.

In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

Eternal and merciful Father, hear us as we ask Thy guidance and blessing through the coming hours. In our decisions here in this Council of our city, direct us that believing in the best, hoping for the best, we may raise our city to new heights of greatness. When the path of duty is long, the hill steep, and the valley forbidding, help us to carry our responsibilities to the end with fortitude of soul to administer the duties of this sacred trust in public office. Unmoved by the storms enable us to walk forward in strength in the name and for the sake of our Lord, and Redeemer.

In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

The meeting was opened with the salute to the Flag.

AGREEMENT FOR ACQUISITION AND INSTALLATION OF PARKING METERS.

The following was received:

City of Boston,
Office of the Mayor, October 10, 1963.
To the City Council.
Gentlemen:

I am submitting herewith an amended order for authorization by the Traffic and Parking Department to purchase new parking meters.

In my opinion, the city should, in purchasing and installing new meters, take advantage of the provisions of section 22A, chapter 40 of the General Laws, whereby meters may be purchased and paid for out of current parking meter receipts for a period not exceeding five years without appropriation by the city.

I respectfully recommend the adoption of this amended order by your Honorable Body for a sum not to exceed $442,500 as estimated in a letter from the Traffic and Parking Commissioner dated April 13, 1963, transmitted to the City Council in my communication of April 22, 1963.

Respectfully,
JOHN F. COLLINS, Mayor.

Ordered, That pursuant to General Laws, chapter 40, section 22A, the Traffic and Parking Department be, and hereby is, authorized to enter, from time to time, into one or more agreements for the acquisition of and installation of not more than six thousand five hundred (6,500) parking meters in the aggregate and such agreement to provide that payments thereunder to the vendors of said parking meters be made over a period not exceeding five (5) years, without appropriation, from fees received for the use of such parking meters for a sum not in excess of $442,500.

Referred to the Committee on Appropriations and Finance.

RECOMMENDING LOAN ORDER FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES.

The following was received:

City of Boston,
Office of the Mayor, October 11, 1963.
To the City Council.
Gentlemen:

I am in receipt of the attached letter from the Chairman of the Boston School Committee, which explains in detail proposed school projects estimated to cost twenty-nine million dollars in the aggregate and implicitly requesting that I recommend to your Honorable Body the origination of a loan for the purpose.

I have been in constant communication with the members of the School Committee on the problems facing the City of Boston in its school building program, and although I am aware that this loan order does not meet the complete needs of our school system, I do feel that this represents a major step forward in the school construction problem.

Accordingly, I recommend that your Honorable Body originate a loan order in the amount of twenty-nine million dollars ($29,000,000) for the purpose of acquiring land for, and constructing, public schoolhouses in the City of Boston now constituting, or hereafter becoming, approved school projects within the meaning of Mass. St. 1948, c. 645, as amended, including originally equipping and furnishing such schoolhouses.

Respectfully,
JOHN F. COLLINS, Mayor.

Boston Public Schools,
October 9, 1963.

Hon. John F. Collins,
Mayor of Boston.

Dear Mayor Collins:

I am most pleased with your offer to submit to the City Council a loan order in the amount of $14,000,000 to be borrowed outside of the debt limit, for the construction of new school buildings. There is complete agreement that the school building program should be started immediately and to continue forward with a view to making our school plant facilities the finest to be had. Truly, with proper planning, finances, and a spirit of cooperation Boston can forge ahead to produce school buildings which will properly house its children, and thus be the pride of Boston and the nation.

To this end, I agree that there is need to examine the over-all school building needs, and that the School Committee or its designated representative sit down with the officials of the Boston Redevelopment Authority, the School Buildings Commissioners, and the Budget Supervisor in an endeavor to come to a general agreement on the guides for the scope of projects in the 1963-1975 school building program.

The Boston Redevelopment Authority and the School Department desire flexibility in the proposed school projects which may become necessary because of changes in BRA plans or other buildings having priority. Therefore, as Chairman of the Boston School Committee, I respectfully request that you submit to the Boston City Council a loan order for the purpose of acquiring land for, and constructing public school houses, including originally equipping and furnishing such schoolhouses for, but not limited to the following projects:

Brighton	James A. Garfield addition	$780,000
Charlestown	Bunker Hill replacement	1,000,000
Dorchester	Minot replacement	680,000
Downtown	Quincy replacement	821,000
Jamaica Plain	Old Agassiz replacement (at Murphy Playground)	821,000
	Theodore Roosevelt addition	1,285,000

Mattapan	Lowell Mason replacement (at Almont Playground)	$1,449,000
Roslindale	Charles Sumner School completion and addition	500,000
Roxbury	Humboldt Avenue School	1,501,000
	Lewis School conversion	300,000
	Dillaway District—Washington Park School	826,000
	Abby W. May replacement (school for Academy Homes)	1,100,000
South End	George Bancroft replacement	1,254,000
South Boston	John Boyle O'Reilly—John A. Andrew replacement	1,770,000
		$14,087,000

In addition to the above list, I am hopeful that the financial capacity of the city is such at this time that you could add to the above total the following urgent projects:

(1) A new School of Business Education, to be constructed in the West End on the site of the William Blackstone School, to replace the present obsolete building in Roxbury. Abandonment of the present School of Business Education building has been recommended

Dorchester	Grover Cleveland addition	$918,000
Jamaica Plain	Ellis Mendell addition and/or new school replacing M. Fuller	$861,000
Roslindale	George H. Conley addition	$780,000

We are desirous of securing a loan order of $19,000,000, exclusive of the loan order for the new comprehensive high school. If you feel that this is in excess of the financial capacity of the city, I would suggest approval of the $14,000,000 loan order as indicated previously, plus $2,575,000 for the new School of Business Education.

In the very near future, it is expected that a site for the proposed new comprehensive high school will be selected. Therefore, in order to expedite funds for construction, I would also request that $10,000,000 for this purpose be included at this time.

In conclusion, I wish to thank you for your cooperation in this matter, and hope that the loan orders will be presented to the City Council in the very near future.

Very truly yours,
LOUISE DAY HICKS,
Chairman, School Committee.

In connection with the foregoing, Councillor Sullivan, for all the Councillors, offered the following:

Ordered, That in accordance with the provisions of chapter 645 of the Acts of 1948 the City of Boston be, and hereby is, authorized to borrow twenty-nine million dollars for acquisition of land and school construction, such sum to be expended under the direction of the Boston School Committee with the approval of the School Building Assistance Committee and the Emergency Finance Commission.

The message and order were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and Finance.

VETO OF ORDINANCE REPEALING ORDINANCE ESTABLISHING CHARGES FOR THE USE OF THE COMMON SEWERS.

The following was received:

City of Boston,
Office of the Mayor, October 16, 1963.
To the City Council.
Gentlemen:

I return herewith, without my signature and disapproved, the ordinance passed by your Honorable Body on September 30, 1963, repealing section 8 of chapter 30 of the Revised Ordinances of 1961 (as inserted by chapter 11 of the Ordinances of 1961, and amended by sections 13 and 14 of the Ordinances of 1962) under which sewer use charges are imposed annually in Boston.

My objection thereto is that section 8 of chapter 30 of the Revised Ordinances of 1961, as amended, which the ordinance returned herewith would repeal apportions the annual cost of maintaining and repairing the city's common sewers among the users of those sewers in proportion to the extent of their respective use, which, in my opinion, is the most just and equitable method of distributing that cost and accords with the general trend throughout the country of treating the municipal sewerage operation as a public utility function. Before the sewer use charge, tax exempt properties contributed little, if anything, in the way of direct revenue toward the operating costs of our city; but that charge now results in their paying their fair share of this expensive municipal service. Furthermore, if the ordinance returned herewith should become law, it would be, both economically and psychologically, a deterrent to new construction in Boston, because it makes no provision for raising a sum of money equivalent to the more than $3,500,000 produced annually by the sewer use charge, and thereby adds about $2.45 to the annual property tax rate. In short, the conditions which in 1961 induced, first the Legislature in chapter 311 of the Acts of 1961, and then your Honorable Body in chapter 11 of the Ordinances of 1961, to provide for an annual sewer use charge in Boston still exist and, upon mature reflection, will be found to require the continuance of that charge.

Respectfully,
JOHN F. COLLINS, Mayor.

In connection with the foregoing, Councilor Piemonte offered the following motion:

Moved, That under the provisions of our City Charter, section 17D and any other provisions thereto, I hereby serve notice and by this action take whatever steps necessary to satisfy the ordinance and the laws in the matter of deliberating and taking action on overriding the veto, that I set next week, Monday, the 28th, at the regular meeting of the Council as the date, place, and time for action to be taken on the Mayor's veto.

The motion was carried. The message and ordinance were laid on the table.

VETO POWER OF MAYOR RE ACTIONS OF CITY COUNCIL.

The following was received:

City of Boston,
Law Department, October 22, 1963.
To the Honorable the City Council.
Gentlemen:

This is in response to your request for my opinion as to the relationship between G. L., c. 83, s. 16 (as amended by St. 1961, c. 311) and St. 1948, c. 452, s. 17D (as appearing in St. 1951, c. 376, s. 1).

The basic provision of the first of these two statutes is that the "aldermen of any city . . . may from time to time establish just and equitable annual charges for the use of common sewers, which shall be paid by every person who enters his particular sewer therein." Under G. L., c. 4, s. 7, cl. First, in a city (such as Boston) which has no aldermen, the word "aldermen is to be construed as meaning the board having like powers or duties, which in Boston is the City Council.

Your precise inquiry is whether in acting under G.L., c. 83, s. 16, the City Council is subject to St. 1948, c. 452, s. 17D, which, so far as here relevant, prescribes:

"Every order, ordinance, resolution and vote of the city council (except special municipal election orders adopted under section thirteen, votes relating to the internal affairs of said council, resolutions not affecting legal rights, votes electing officials, and votes confirming appointments by the mayor) shall be presented to the mayor for his approval. If he approves it, he shall sign it; and thereupon it shall be in force. If he disapproves it, he shall, by filing it with the city clerk with his objections thereto in writing, return it to the city council which shall enter the objections at large on its records. Every order, ordinance, resolution and vote authorizing a loan or appropriating money or accepting a statute involving the expenditure of money, which is so returned to the city council, shall be void, and no further action shall be taken thereon; but the city council shall proceed forthwith to reconsider every other order, ordinance, resolution and vote so returned, and if, after such reconsideration, two thirds of all the city councilors vote to pass it notwithstanding the disapproval of the mayor, it shall then be in force; but no such vote shall be taken before the seventh day after the the city council has entered the objections at large on its records. Every order, ordinance, resolution or vote required by this section to be presented to the mayor which, within fifteen days after such presentation, is neither signed by him nor filed with his written objections as hereinbefore provided, shall be in force on and after the sixteenth day following such presentation."

An order, ordinance, resolution or vote of the City Council under G.L., c. 83, s. 16 (as amended), does not come within the express exceptions to the provision last quoted for clearly such an order, ordinance, resolution or vote is neither a special municipal election order, nor a vote relating to the internal affairs of the City Council, nor a resolution not affecting legal rights, nor a vote electing an official, nor a vote confirming an appointment by the Mayor. With the exceptions just noted, s. 17D relates to [e] very order, ordinance, resolution and vote of the city council." "The Legislature must be presumed to have meant what the words plainly say" Condon v. Haitzma, 325 Mass. 371, 373. Moreover, the express mention of certain exceptions excludes by implication other exceptions not mentioned. McArthur Brothers Co. v. Commonwealth, 197 Mass. 137, 139. Furthermore, G.L., c. 83, s. 16, and St. 1948, c. 452, s. 17D, "must be so construed as to give reasonable effect to both, unless there be some positive repugnancy between them." Brooks v. Fitchburg and Leominster Street Ry. Co., 200 Mass. 8, 17. It is my opinion, therefore, that in acting under G.L., c. 83, s. 16, the City Council is subject to St. 1948, c. 452, s. 17D, that every order, ordinance, resolution or vote under G.L., c. 83, s. 16, must be presented to the Mayor for his approval, and that he has power to veto the same. See, in further support of this view, Jewett v. Mayor of Medford, 233 Mass. 65, esp. 68-69, and Union Street Ry. Co. v. Mayor of New Bedford 253 Mass. 314 esp. 316.

Cardinal Cushing Becomes Boston City Hospital Trustee

Richard Cardinal Cushing on December 2 took the oath of office as a member of the Boston City Hospital Board of Trustees in a special ceremony in the office of Mayor John F. Collins at City Hall.

Present as the oath was administered by City Clerk Joseph M. Dunlea, was the Mayor, other members of the board, and a group of hospital officials headed by Dr. John F. Conlin, Superintendent.

Hailing the Cardinal's decision to accept a place on the board, Mayor Collins declared, "I believe this appointment to be one of the most important it has been my privilege to make since I assumed the office of Mayor.

"I am most gratified," he continued, "that Cardinal Cushing has found it possible to assist in the future progress of this great institution. Next year Boston will be observing the 100th anniversary of the founding of City Hospital. Behind it is a sterling record of service as one of the great general hospitals.

"His Eminence will bring to the hospital a wealth of knowledge and a background particularly adapted to advancing the great work of this hospital to the community—as an institution great in its capacity for patient care, great in its long established potential as a leader in medical research and medical education.

"I am delighted that Cardinal Cushing has agreed to make available to Boston and its City Hospital his great capacity for leadership and ability for getting things done and above all his sympathetic understanding for aiding the ill and the suffering."

Cardinal Cushing will fill a vacancy existing on the hospital board of trustees since the resignation of Attorney Joseph A. Caulfield several months ago. William H. Ellis, Jr., is president of the present board. Other members are Dr. Thomas J. Giblin, Attorney Louis J. Guaragna, and Louis P. Smith.

Presently the hospital is engaged in an extensive reconstruction program and in the modernization of its physical facilities and equipment.

"CHANCE TO SERVE"—Cardinal Cushing with President William H. Ellis, Jr., of the City Hospital Board of Trustees and Mayor Collins. Ellis proposed the Cardinal's name for a vacancy on the trustee board. Mayor Collins accepted Ellis's suggestion. The Cardinal was enthusiastic about the whole thing because it gave him a chance to work among the poor.

"Bill Ellis Suggested a Job and I Took It Because It Meant Work Among the Very Poor"

"Boston City Hospital is one of the truly great hospitals and its staff is one of the very finest anywhere."

The speaker was Richard Cardinal Cushing. The occasion was his acceptance of the oath of office as a member of the Boston City Hospital Board of Trustees. The place was the Mayor's office, Boston City Hall. The audience was the Mayor and an outpouring of the press, radio, and TV.

The Mayor invited the newsmen to introduce themselves to the Cardinal. It would despatch things. The prelate brushed the suggestion aside. He knew them all.

The oath had been taken. The Mayor expressed his joy that the Cardinal had accepted his invitation to serve.

It was then the Cardinal expressed his admiration of City Hospital over the years. "It is there," he said, "you will find the poorest of the poor. It is there you will find the most excellent medical procedures.

"I welcome the job as a chance to visit the ailing poor. I will do so not as a priest but as a citizen of Boston."

The Cardinal related how it came about that he became a member of the hospital trustees.

"I was down to Long Island. It was one of those annual visits. My good friend Bill Ellis (president of the Boston City Hospital board of trustees) was there. We got to chatting and Bill said there was a job open at City Hospital. He asked me if I would be interested in it. I told him I would. I wrote him a letter the next day after thinking it over. Bill talked to the Mayor and the good Mayor was gracious enough to give me the job."

The City Hospital trusteeship pays no salary. It entails much work. But as the Cardinal says it offers an excellent opportunity to work among the poor.

Mayor Assures New President of Support

Mayor John F. Collins, as president of the American Municipal Association, wired President Lyndon B. Johnson that he will get full support from leaders of the country's municipalities.

"As you assume your heavy burden of responsibilities for leadership of this great nation in a world united by sorrow and prayer," Collins wrote, "the representatives of American cities join with you in your prayers for guidance.

"We share your hopes for a world in peace and pledge our faith in your leadership.

"The officials of the municipalities of America join with me in uniting our untiring efforts and resources behind you."

Festival Now in Full Swing on Common

The 14th annual City of Boston Christmas Festival got under full swing last week according to Festival Director Paul Hines.

It was formally opened Sunday, December 1, with the switching on of the lights at the Common illuminating the city's heroic-sized crèche and supporting religious displays, but owing to the week-end rain and storm the completion of the beautiful Christmas pagentry at the Common was delayed.

The "Toyland," a new festival feature this year will be replete with a wide variety of both animate and inanimate toys and novelties never before on public exhibit in these parts.

Toyland will be open daily from 9 A.M. to 11 P.M.

Already Santa's eight white reindeer are in their stalls at Playland enjoying their annual festival holiday. They will be joined on Wednesday by four pint-sized Sicilian donkeys, two of which stole the show during the 1962 festival, a flock of sheep and possibly other interesting animals.

The daily music program at the Christmas chapel, adjacent to the crèche at the Common, will also get under way in full swing today. At noontime the Oliver Wendell Holmes Junior High School Glee Club will present a medley of famous Christmas hymns and carols.

In the afternoon at 4.30, John Kiley, the well-known organist, will present at the chapel, a series of "Old World Christmas Melodies."

In the evening there will be organ music from 7 to 9. The highlight of the program will be a concert of Christmas organ reveries by Frances Farrell.

MDC Starts Muddy River Cleanup Soon

The MDC has let out bids for a $300,000 Muddy River dredging project and work is expected to get under way within a month.

The cleanup of the river from Park Drive to Ward Pond, which is divided between Boston and Brookline, should take a year to complete.

Following the dredging a flood control project will be initiated as part of an over-all program to eliminate any future flooding of the Kenmore Square MTA Station.

Hopes for Landing World's Fair in '75 Looming Brighter Following Committee News Conference

Visions of a World's Fair in Boston in 1975, although still somewhat obscured by a series of major obstacles that will have to be hurdled, appeared brighter after the first news conference conducted by leaders of the 1975 World Freedom Fair of Boston, Inc.

President Gilbert H. Hood, Jr. of the Fair organization, and also head of H. P. Hood & Sons, Inc., pointed out that steps already are being taken to win the enthusiasm of the people of Boston, the interest of business and industry, the official support of the city, of Massachusetts and of the five other New England states, and the blessings of the U. S. Government and the Bureau of International Expositions.

James G. Roberts, executive vice-president of The Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce — who first introduced the idea of a World's Fair early last year — declared that by 1975 Boston's renewal will have been completed.

Competition with other cities will be keen, Roberts said, but "we feel confident that we will win."

Boston's chances for the '75 Fair are augmented by the commemorative event taking place at that time — the 200th anniversary of the American Revolution. "Freedom" has been tentatively chosen as the theme for the proposed Fair.

The Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce has been the central liaison group, and the operating corporation was formed to control the name, to serve as a working nucleus, to be in a position to make definite commitments, and to handle and be accountable for any funds that are collected to carry on the work.

The Boston World's Fair Corporation, Mr. Hood reported, has been thinking in terms of the type of fair in which the sponsoring community furnishes the land, buildings and facilities. The exhibitors rent the space and man it, but at the end of the period, all the buildings and property belong to the Fair organization. Under this arrangement, although it requires more preplanning and greater financing, the City of Boston will acquire permanent additions to its skyline which will certainly be an asset to the community, he added.

About 150-200 acres of land will be required for the Fair site, Mr. Hood declared, compared to New York's 350.

Once the site is selected, plans will unfold on the buildings and facilities, which will tie in with the long-range programming for Boston itself. The third major step will be the commitments by the State of Massachusetts and the five other New England states, and then the federal government.

Boston might be expected to raise $20 million, with the New England states adding about $40-$50 million more, and the federal government—based on its investments at Seattle and New York Fairs—might contribute about $20 million more, it was noted.

Steps have already been taken to obtain the support of the federal government and thus assure Boston of the tentative nod of the Bureau of International Expositions. "We have had a fine preliminary exchange of correspondence between the late President Kennedy and the director of the B.I.E.," Mr Hood said.

The Paris-headquartered B.I.E., comprising 30 nations, screens applications for World's Fairs. The U.S. is not a member.

Once a fair management does get the approval of the B.I.E., it amounts to an official international "hunting license" to approach member nations for their participation, he added.

The immediate need, Mr Hood pointed out, is to obtain a "small sum of money from the community to undertake the preliminary projections for Boston."

Commuter Transport Pressing Need

The Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce issued the following statement relative to the action of the New Haven Railroad in seeking to discontinue part of its local commuter service:

"This action on the part of the New Haven Railroad in seeking discontinuance of some of its commuter trains is not unexpected.

"It highlights again, as before, the immediate need for comprehensive public policy and direction for the entire metropolitan area's commuter transportation system. The commuting problem can no longer be attacked on a piecemeal or on a short-term desperation effort. The time is now for forceful action to prevent another transportation impasse similar to the one now confronting the South Shore area.

"We must be able to provide a public mass transportation service to Needham, Stoughton, and Dedham just as soon as the New Haven's petition should be approved by appropriate authority. The vital rights of ways must be protected.

"Must we fail to learn from the demise of the Old Colony Branch what a lack of rail service means? Can we afford additional expressways into these areas in addition to the much-needed Southwest Expressway? One highway is certainly needed now, but its need is based upon some sort of rail service as a compensating or balancing effect.

"At the last legislative session, the Metropolitan Transit Authority was authorized to undertake engineering and economic feasibility studies of extending its main line rapid transit service from Boston to the Route 128 station in Westwood. Such a study makes sense and the MTA should pursue it with greater emphasis and determination in the light of the New Haven's announcement.

"Public mass transportation is vitally necessary to bring about the proper balance between rail and rubber in the Greater Boston area. We must act now to insure this balance."

He is survived by his wife, Grace; three daughters, Miss Grace E. O'Brien, Mrs. Henry Pare, and Mrs. Francis White, and eight grandchildren, all of Walpole.

He also leaves three brothers, Capt. Cornelius O'Brien, commander of Boston Police District 2; Charles V. O'Brien of the City of Boston Banking Department, and William O'Brien, civilian head of the Boston Police Department accident report division; and a sister, Mrs. Gertrude Thompson of Norwood.

Funeral services were held Saturday, November 23, with a Solemn Requiem Mass at 9 o'clock in St. Mary's Church, East Walpole.

He was 74. His career included service as a Boston newspaper reporter and executive work with the Haverhill and Boston Chambers of Commerce before going to Washington where he served under the state administrations of Governors Saltonstall, Dever, Bradford, Herter, and Volpe.

Besides Colonel Hines he leaves his wife, Helen (Mansfield); one son, Richard, of Washington, a secretary of the Congressional Atomic Committee; two other brothers, Dr. Francis J. Hines and Albert J. Hines, assistant clerk of Suffolk County Criminal Court.

Public Works Readies For Winter Onslaught

The Boston Public Works Department has started its task of winterizing against the worst Old Man Winter can throw at the city.

Commissioner James W. Haley has under his command 140 plows, sandspreaders, front-end loaders and bulldozers ready for immediate round-the-clock duty.

Also on hand are 152 regular drivers for these vehicles along with 120 spare operators.

Starting last week, Haley said that more than 30,000 cars will be "tagged" as a warning to drivers that their vehicles were illegally parked in such a manner as to impede snow removal.

Leaflets will be attached to windshields explaining the regulations pertaining to parking on residential streets during the winter months.

Megalopolitan Complex from Maine to Washington, D.C., Already in Making

(Because of the importance of the recent Boston Municipal Employees Conferama, held at the Public Library, November 21 and 22, the City Record plans in the weeks ahead to place before its readers discussions held at various panels during the two-day meeting. Following are the remarks of Traffic Commissioner Thomas F. Carty.)

In an article appearing in the July, 1963 issue of Traffic Quarterly, Henry Quimby stated that in 1900 approximately 40 per cent of the population of the United States was urbanized. By 1960 urbanization accounted for 70 per cent. By 2000 the figure is expected to reach 85 per cent. In this century the nation's total inhabitants will have increased fourfold while those residing in urban regions will have multiplied ninefold. Urbanized areas of metropolitan status will have grown in number from 52 to about 300.

Relatively limited in over-all land space, these emerging urban patterns will tend increasingly to interact and fuse into huge metropolitan superregions—in fact if not in jurisdictional recognition.

More than 100 of the larger American metropolitan areas will, by the year 2000, have effectively fused, in greater or lesser degree, into some 20 super metropolitan regions of vast economic and social influence. These superregions can then be expected to house 70 per cent of the nation's people and generate more than a comparable share of its gross product.

Prominent among the several future U. S. superregions will be those centered on Chicago-Milwaukee; Los Angeles-San Diego; Detroit-Toledo; Miami-Jacksonville, and others. Several superregions, before they have fused internally, will interact and begin fusion with others.

But the most prominent of all our superregions has already formed and is in the process of accelerated consolidation. It houses one quarter of all U. S. residents; it generates a greater share of the gross national product; and it dominates U. S. life and development. This huge megalopolitan complex extends 800 miles along the Atlantic seaboard from north of Portland, Maine, to Richmond, Virginia, and considerably inland. It includes all of the vast New York metropolitan region and Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Hartford, Providence, and Boston, as well as the rapidly urbanizing areas in between. This northeast Atlantic seaboard corridor presents the greatest Transportation challenge of contemporary and future America.

'63 Session's Work on Transportation Measures Wins Praise of Chamber Group

The Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce's metropolitan development department has congratulated Governor Peabody and the Massachusetts Legislature for the enactment of transportation measures during the 1963 session.

"The 1963 General Court produced a number of significant acts which will benefit the motoring and commuting public. In fact, it was the best year for public mass transportation since the enactment of the first highway bond issue in 1949 which permitted the Commonwealth to commence construction on the 1948 Master Highway Plan. The governor and the members of the Legislature are to be congratulated," the Chamber declared.

On rapid transit legislation, the Chamber said the $31 million extension of the Metropolitan Transit Authority's mainline system from downtown Boston to the Malden-Melrose line will perform two vital functions, namely, the increase of service between the three communities plus the demolition of the "ugly blight-producing El structure through Charlestown" which is "certain to stimulate the renewal program in that area."

Enacted were two other rapid transit measures which were considered important by the Chamber: The feasibility studies of extending the MTA between Forest Hills to Route 128 in Westwood and from Wonderland Station to Route 107 in Revere.

In important respects superregions' characteristics begin to appear at a relatively early stage in the interaction between metropolitan areas and nearby cities.

Complete fusion between cities or metropolitan areas may take generations or may never fully mature, yet their formation into a megalopolitan structure may be an accomplished fact relatively early in their modern evolution. One of the most significant patterns emerging in the early progress is transportation.

The creation of a Metropolitan Planning District and Council to provide professional study and planning for the major common problems in the Greater Boston area was considered significant by the Chamber.

The Chamber commented: "The Metropolitan Area Planning Council should provide the necessary mechanism to identify and solve the many metropolitan conflicts and problems. What remains is the appointment of necessary officials to undertake and to direct the program and a willing acceptance on the part of participating municipalities of the need and value of such a planning group."

The Chamber held important the enactment of laws affecting seat belts, learning drivers between 16 and 18 who must obtain state-issued permits and the new no-fix traffic ticket law which was "strengthened and clarified."

The Chamber concurred with the enactment of a law which permits reimbursement of moving expenses for people forced to relocate through land taking by the DPW for highway purposes.

Concluding its report, the Chamber stated: "The 1963 Legislature made its mark in attempting to bring about balance in the Greater Boston metropolitan network. By its enactment of the various programs it has displayed a sensitivity to the needs of the commuter."

Mourning Period to Ban Parties, Etc.

Administrative Services Director Henry A. Scagnoli issued the following directive to all department heads November 29:

"Due to the period of mourning that has been established as a tribute to our late President, John F. Kennedy, it is requested that no celebrations or festivities be held on your departmental premises during this period, which extends through December 21, 1963."

New Blue Cross and Blue Shield Rates

Administrative Services Director Henry A. Scagnoli issued the following directive to all department heads and county officials, December 2:

The City of Boston has recently negotiated with Blue Cross-Blue Shield for a new contract commencing on January 1, 1964, which has resulted in a slight increase in premium for City of Boston-County of Suffolk employees.

The following will be the new rates, which will be deducted from December pay checks:

Individual Plan — $1.43 weekly.

Family Plan — $3.70 weekly.

The above figures indicate an increase of two (2) cents per week for an individual membership and an increase of nine (9) cents per week for a family membership.

The will be no increase in premium for the Life Insurance for the year 1964. Deductions will still be withheld on a three-week per month basis.

Police Ball Dedicated To Late President

The 1963 annual concert and ball of the Boston Police Department, held at the Garden, Tuesday, December 3, was dedicated to the memory of the late President.

The dedication was made at the request of the members of the department who had been assigned to guard the President on his many trips in the area.

Henry A. Barry

Henry A. Barry, retired treasury department paymaster, died recently. He made his home at 730 Columbia road, Dorchester. He has served the city in various capacities since 1918, when he began his municipal career as a clerk. He retired in 1959.

As a paymaster he handled disbursements to county employees, jurors, and witnesses.

He leaves his wife the former Sarah Benson and two daughters, Mrs. Gail Finnerty and Mrs. Eileen O'Neil of Dorchester.

SEWERAGE WORKS, BEAVER STREET Hyde Park

Problems

On his way to London to assume his post as executive officer of the Anglican Communion, Bishop Stephen F. Bayne, Jr., was asked how he felt about his new duties. "Well," he said, "I am rather like a mosquito in a nudist camp. I know what I ought to do, but I don't know where to begin."

II. RESIGNATION.

The following resignation, which became effective as of 8 A.M., Tuesday, November 12, 1963, is hereby announced:

Maintenance Mechanic (Blacksmith) Stanley F. Zuray, Maintenance Division.

III. FIRE ALARM BOX ESTABLISHED.

IV. FIRE ALARM BOX INSTALLED.

The following fire alarm box, which was established in General Order No. 8, dated March 4, 1959, has been installed and connected into Circuit 82:

548, Faneuil and Dunboy streets.

Company commanders will add above box to Circuit Card 82.

V. CALL'S ASSIGNMENT.

Company commanders shall add the following signal number to Call's assignment cards in this department:

Signal 362, A. W. Perry, Inc., 13 Lincoln street (corner of Bedford street). (Sprinkler.) Apparatus to respond: Engine 25, Ladder 8, District 3. Nearest box is 1431.

VI. HIGH COMMENDATION.

At 8.13 P.M., November 4, 1963, the department responded to an alarm from Box 352 for a fire in the building, 44 and 46 Woodrow avenue, Dorchester.

Upon arrival the department received information that two children were in the third-floor apartment, which was heavily involved in fire, heat, smoke, and gases.

Fire Fighter Bernard F. Woods of Engine Company 13, with other members of that company, ran a 2½-inch hose line over the front stairs, and while the line was being placed in operation, Fire Fighter Woods crawled down a narrow hallway in the front of the building, a distance of about 20 feet, and in searching a bedroom located the child under the bed. He picked the child up and crawled back through the hallway and took the child to the street where he applied mouth to mouth resuscitation.

Fire Fighter James F. Donovan of Ladder Company 23 ascended a 35-foot ladder to the third floor front of the building, entered the apartment, and while searching the area, he found a five-year-old child lying on the floor. He carried the child out of the apartment and down the front stairway to the street where he applied mouth to mouth resuscitation.

Both the foregoing named fire fighters performed the rescue work while the building was still heavily charged with heat, smoke, and gases, before hose lines were in operation on the inside of the third floor and before adequate ventilation had been accomplished.

Since Fire Fighters Donovan and Woods performed this rescue work with complete disregard for their own safety and under very difficult conditions, the Fire Commissioner is pleased to commend them highly, and their cases are referred to the Board of Merit for further consideration.

VII. COMMENDATIONS.

Fire Fighter John P. Byrne of Engine Company 9 is hereby commended for responding to and working at fire, Box 5276, five alarms, on October 25, 1963, while off duty.

Fire Fighter Frederick A. Poggie of Engine Company 30 is hereby commended for holding a fire in check until the arrival of apparatus at Box 2774, on October 25, 1963, while he was off duty.

Fire Lieutenant Richard A. Kemp of Engine Company 43 is hereby commended for sounding an alarm of fire from Box 7251 and holding a fire in check until the arrival of apparatus on November 5, 1963, while off duty.

Kind of Sneaky

They brought their wives to the convention in Atlantic City but managed to sneak away for a meal at a swanky restaurant.

"Shall I bring you a couple of demitasses?" asked the waiter at the end of the meal.

"Heavens, no," pleaded one of them. "It would be just our luck to have our wives walk in."

WIDOW'S ALLOWANCE

Alice Cotter, 211 Harvard avenue, Allston, widow of the late Peter F. Cotter, a former hoseman in the Fire Department has been granted an annuity of $1,500 a year.

It's a rare Washington battle that Vice Admiral Hyman G. Rickover loses—but a Wave won this one. As he entered the office of a Wave officer in his division, the exchange went something like this:

Admiral—"What do you mean, eating on the government time?"

Wave—"Why, Admiral, this is yesterday's lunch."

Pause.

Admiral (defeated)—"Well, in the future eat your lunch before you come to work."

Personnel Order No. 299.

Patrolmen Neil M. Powers, James R. Milroy, and Paul E. Johnson, of the Tactical Patrol Force, are hereby commended for meritorious police duty and each is granted three days' additional vacation.

As a result of a wave of armed robberies of taxicab operators the areas of which were pinpointed through the Monthly Crime Summary, the above patrolmen were assigned to concentrate their duty in the area which had been specified.

About 12.05 A.M., Sunday, October 13, 1963, while patrolling in Downing street, near Cabot street, Roxbury, the officers observed a suspect answering the description of a culprit wanted for these taxicab holdups. As they approached, the suspect was seen putting an object into his jacket pocket. At this time the officers were completely unaware that a robbery had taken place. Seeing the officers, the individual broke into a run with the officers abandoning the vehicle, car No. 4, in which they were patrolling and pursued him. The suspect, later identified as Julius Crawford, 23 years, of 45 Park street, Woburn, was captured some distance away and was placed under arrest on suspicion of armed robbery. As the officers were searching Crawford prior to taking him to the police car for transportation to District 10 a taxicab being operated by Joseph Daly, 31 years, of 87 Bowdoin avenue, Dorchester, drove up to the scene and shouted, "Hold that guy—he just held me up—he's got a knife and has gloves."

The officers continued to search Crawford and found on his person four knives, one of which was removed from his jacket pocket, a pair of brown knitted gloves and $14 in U.S. currency.

The victim, Joseph Daly, picked up Crawford at Vernon and Washington streets, Roxbury, and after riding a short distance, Crawford put his left arm around Daly's neck, placed a knife against Daly's side and said, "I want all the money you've got." After turning into Vernon street, Crawford grabbed the steering wheel and turned it sharply causing the vehicle to collide with a signpost and come to a halt. Crawford again demanded the taxicab driver's money and Daly handed him a total of $14. Crawford then jumped out the right door of the cab and fled the scene.

Daly radioed his dispatcher for police assistance and proceeded to follow the robber, but when he found him again he was already in the custody of the aforementioned officers.

On Monday, October 14, 1963, Julius Crawford was arraigned in Roxbury Municipal Court and the case was continued to Monday, October 28, 1963. On that date, the evidence was presented to Judge Elwood McKenney who found probable cause and bound the defendant over to the Grand Jury, holding him in $75,000 bail.

The Police Commissioner is pleased to recognize the alertness, keen observation and perseverance displayed by the above mentioned officers in this case which resulted in the apprehension of a dangerous felon who would have continued to harass drivers of taxicabs and possibly cause serious injury to one of his victims if he had not been taken into custody at this time. This type of devotion to duty is worthy of praise.

November 21.

Personnel Order No. 300.

Patrolman George J. Floyd of District 10 is hereby commended for meritorious police duty and is granted three days' additional vacation.

At about 8.10 A.M., Friday, August 23, 1963, two men entered the variety store at 491 Huntington avenue, Roxbury, owned and operated by Hyman Waldman of the same address. One of the men, who was armed with a revolver, told the owner that "this is a holdup"; the second man remained near the door, acting as the lookout. Hyman Waldman gave the No. 1 man his wallet which contained $1, a key case and two dollars in change. The No. 1 man then told Waldman to go into the rear store-room and on entering the room, Waldman picked up an empty beer bottle, turned and struck the No. 1 man with it. The robber then struck Waldman several times on the top of his head with the revolver and both men ran from the store.

Patrolman Floyd in the 10-0 car heard the report of this armed holdup and while he was cruising on Parker street, he saw two men running and he went in pursuit of them. The patrolman caught up with them in Station street, commanded them to stop and when they did not, he fired one round from his service revolver over their heads and they promptly came to a halt. Patrolman Floyd ordered them to put their hands over their heads, then searched them and took from the No. 1 man a .22 caliber nine-shot High Standard revolver.

Patrolman Floyd placed both men under arrest and they were taken to District 10. Interrogation of both suspects revealed them to be one Thomas F. Brennan, 18 years, single, of 21 Dacia street, Roxbury, and the other, Ernest

T. Kelley, 23 years, married, of the same address. The victim positively identified them as the men who robbed and assaulted him in his variety store.

On Saturday, August 24, 1963, both prisoners appeared in Roxbury Municipal Court on charges of robbery while armed and both were held for the grand jury. On Friday, November 8, 1963, Kelley and Brennan were brought before Judge Frank Donahue in Suffolk Superior Court where both pleaded guilty to charges of robbery while armed and both were sentenced to 5 years and 1 day to be served in the Concord Reformatory.

The Police Commissioner is pleased to recognize the courage, devotion to duty, and alertness which was displayed by Patrolman Floyd in this case, who, without assistance, brought about the arrest of two dangerous criminals, one of whom was armed at the time, in a matter of minutes after the commission of the crime.

November 21.

Personnel Order No. 301.

Patrolmen Henry B. Earl and Robert E. Molloy and Special Officers Salvatore P. DeLuca and George C. Woods of District 19 are hereby commended for meritorious police duty and each is granted two days' additional vacation.

About 10.04 P.M., Friday, September 27, 1963, the officers responded to the corner of Kerwin street and Talbot avenue, Dorchester, relative to a man firing a gun. Upon arrival, the officers observed a man, later identified as one Joseph Colleton, 20 years, of 110 Wales street, Dorchester, placing an object in his jacket pocket. Colleton was questioned regarding the firing of the gun and a search of his person revealed a fully-loaded .25 caliber automatic Brevette pistol. Colleton was brought to District 19 and upon being questioned as to ownership of the gun, he stated he did fire the pistol several times and that he had acquired it from one William Royce, 18 years, of 34 Browning avenue, Dorchester. Colleton was arraigned in Dorchester Court on a charge of violation of the Firearms Law.

Upon the arrest of the subject, Colleton, a night-long search was made for William Royce and he was finally apprehended and taken to District 19. A prolonged interrogation of Royce was conducted by Sergt. William J. Parlon and the above-named officers concerning his acquisition of the gun and other criminal activities. He finally confessed to participating in an unsolved armed robbery in another district of the city and a total of 29 house breaks in various parts of the city and in the Town of Brookline, in which property to the value of several thousands of dollars was stolen. The gun in question he stated, was stolen in one of the house-breaks.

William Ryce was arraigned in Dorchester District Court before Judge Jerome Troy who declined jurisdiction and ordered him held in $20,000 bail for action by the grand jury.

During the course of their investigation of this case, the above officers devoted much off-duty time in checking out the accuracy of the information furnished by the prisoner by accompanying him with detectives of other districts and officers of the Town of Brookline, while the prisoner, William Royce, pointed out various houses he had burglarized.

The Police Commissioner is pleased to recognize the excellent police work performed by the officers named above in this case and for their perseverance and devotion to duty which they manifested by their willingness to devote hours beyond their regular tours of duty to bring about the solution of numerous major felonies. This type of police duty is commendable.

Continued Rail Service Most Essential For City's Future

Fin. Com. Urges Repair Unit For School Work

Establishment of a small furniture repair unit in the School Buildings Department has been proposed by the Boston Finance Commission.

The Commission made the recommendation in noting the cost of such repairs by private contractors had been steadily rising in recent years with over $80,000 spent already in 1963 for this purpose.

In addition, the Commission noted hidden costs brought about by the need for inspecting the work of contractors and for writing, printing, and advertising specifications for their contracts.

The Finance Commission suggested that a small staff consisting of a working foreman and two assistants could handle School Department repair and refinishing operations for no more than $25,000 a year.

To substantiate its proposal, the Commission said the work of repairing and refinishing school furniture was not of an emergency nature and could be spread out to meet the capabilities of a regular staff. It does not require a high level of skill, according to the Finance Commission, and the Civil Service Commission has an eligible list in this area.

The built-in costs of contractors, including profit, insurance, fringe benefits, overhead, etc., would be eliminated and "it would no longer be necessary for the department to wait for an accumulation of work for the purpose of setting up a contract."

(As Mayor Collins points out the proposed abandonment of rail commuter service to Boston represents a threat not alone to the future of the city and the metropolitan area but to the entire state and to so-called "core cities" everywhere in the nation.)

Because of the seriousness of the situation now confronting this area and particularly the City of Boston, the "City Record" produces in this issue two important papers presented at the recent Boston Municipal Employees' Conferama, dealing with the vital problem of mass transportation.

The papers are those of Senator Mario Umana, chairman of the legislative transportation committee, and Dr. Joseph F. Maloney, chairman of the Massachusetts Transportation Commission. Elsewhere in this issue is a highly interesting address by President Robert M. Jenney of the Jenney Manufacturing Company before the conferama.)

BY SENATOR MARIO UMANA

The development, prosperity, and current difficulties of the Greater Boston region have all been strongly influenced by public transportation. Every older urban area in the nation, and some of the newer urban areas as well, is currently undergoing some kind of public transportation difficulty.

Boston is no exception. What is different about Boston is that we now have an exceptional opportunity to formulate substantial improvements in our public transportation policies—policy changes that can further encourage the revitalization of every urban area in the Commonwealth.

The Massachusetts General Court will be faced with three basic problems requiring decisions at its next session. The first is whether to continue railroad commuter service. The second is the sick condition of far too many of the private bus companies serving many communities throughout the Commonwealth, as well as several communities in the Boston area.

BY DR. JOSEPH F. MALONEY

The importance of preserving and improving public transportation has been briefly described by Senator Umana. Efforts at improvement of facilities, however, would be in vain—and an extravagant waste of public funds—unless the public can be persuaded to reverse recent trends and return to using public transportation.

The purpose of the MTC Demonstration Program is to help determine the circumstances under which the public can be so persuaded to make better use of existing public transportation facilities. This is such a truly national problem that the MTC secured a $3.6 million grant from the Office of Transportation of the Housing and Home Finance Agency to help finance the $5.4 million Demonstration Project. This project is drawing to a close and we are now preparing preliminary conclusions.

To accomplish this purpose, the MTC has been conducting a number of experiments—all of which have been highly successful—in that we have learned something

Wooden Water Mains At Skyscraper Site

Workmen have unearthed two remarkably preserved 110-year-old pottery jugs from 25 feet down on the Franklin Street side of the State Street Bank skyscraper site. At the Franklin-Oliver Street corner of the excavation they found some 15 feet of huge log water pipe with a neat 3½-inch hole bored through, similar to that laid in 1795 to convey water from Jamaica Pond to Boston.

The jugs, found in what was probably an old well, were engraved "J. P. Plummer 1853" and "M. E. Scotts." Some legwork turned up an 1853 Boston City Directory, thanks to the Bostonian Society, which lists a Jonathan P. Plummer of 968 Washington street and a Marshall E. Scott of 1002 Washington street. Both were brewers of root or small (virtually nonalcoholic) beer. Alas, the jugs contained no samples of the product.

AF Reserve Medicos To Get BCH Training

Boston City Hospital and the Air Force have established a training program that is certain to yield advantages to both parties.

Under terms of the agreement Air Force Medical Corpsmen from the 619th Hospital Reserve Unit will assist in relieving the hospital of a shortage of technicians on designated week ends and will at the same time receive on-the-job training.

The agreement worked out between the Air Force and the hospital, marks the introduction of the program on a big scale in the New England area.

First appearance of the 619th Reserves at the hospital was on the week end of December 7-8. They were welcomed to the hospital by Miss Margaret B. Welch, R.N., director of nursing services.

Most of the medical corpsmen are college graduates or trained technicians.

Overseeing the corpsmen's training also are 25 Air Force nurses and 15 Air Force doctors.

The 619th chose Boston City for the program, "because it is a large city hospital," Maj. Katherine A. Powers, chief nurse of the group, explained.

"The men will be able to see everything they should see. Also, many of the Air Force doctors and nurses have worked here at City Hospital. We felt it would be easier to begin this program in a familiar environment."

M Sgt. Thomas J. Philbin, said, "We also want the corpsmen to be familiar with the problems of the aged. In the Air Force there are very few old people, and the men should be able to handle the problems of all age groups."

The 619th is required to be ready to set up an emergency 500-bed hospital anywhere in the world. For example, if a disaster occurred in Boston, the 619th must be ready to respond with medical care for any needy citizens.

150 Causeway Street Disposed Of By B. & M.

The North Station Industrial Building at 150 Causeway street was sold December 10 by the Boston & Maine Railroad to the Boston development firm of Linnell & Cox, Inc., for $2,600,000.

An announcement by the railroad said passage of title followed more than a year of negotiations. The price also included five acres of land behind the building and between it and the Charles River.

The building, next door to the North Station and Boston Garden, has 13 stories. The railroad said it would continue to maintain its offices in the building.

Principals in Linnell & Cox are Robert C. Linnell of 145 Pinckney street, Beacon Hill, and Russell N. Cox of Weston, both formerly executives of Cabot, Cabot & Forbes.

The building houses the railroad's general offices and other business and industrial tenants—among them Linnell & Cox.

Participating in the financing of the transaction were the First National Bank of Boston and the Charlestown Savings Bank, which granted first mortgages to the purchaser.

Rapid Transit Only Way To Move People To And From Core Districts

(As president of the firm bearing his name Robert M. Jenney is interested in the sale of gasoline. Beyond that he is very concerned with the well-being of motorists. All of that doesn't prevent him from being a bit of a philosopher with a real gift for wit.

At the recent City Employees' Conferama he came up with some brilliant observations which anticipated a core city like Boston deprived of rail connections with its suburbs. Here's how Mr. Jenney expressed his views on such a catastrophe along with his ideas of what should be done about it.)

Let us pause a moment and look into the not-too-distant future and observe the lot of the future automobile commuter. Visualize a picture of Greater Boston. Note the absence of commuter trains in and out of North and South Stations. Now look at the radial highways at peak travel hours.

Nothing is moving except pedestrians and children playing in the streets and playgrounds. Automobile horns rise in equal crescendo to the tempers of drivers. Yet, nothing moves along the highways. Many commuters used to hear the six o'clock news at home. Now, in our picture, they hear it in their automobile.

In another few years they will be hearing the seven o'clock news while caught in the clutches of the traffic vise. How long will the motorist endure such? The answer is simply this: He will endure it until he and everyone in front and behind him in such continuing traffic jams band together and raise an angry outcry for relief.

Two Places To Go

To whom will they cry out? They have but two places to go—the state and the federal government. What should they demand? First, they should demand the completion of the master highway program, which has been studied and restudied since 1948. Second, they should demand alternate means of transportation, namely, comfortable, convenient, and economical rapid transit to suburban points. Rapid Transit—the only safe, sure, all-weather way to move people between the city's central business district and home.

It is vital that we begin now to move boldly and swiftly in a dual program of completing the Master Highway Plan and laying tracks for rapid transit. On the latter, I cannot emphasize too strongly that we must take immediate steps to protect the existing railroad rights-of-way.

Without motility, Boston stands to lose its attractiveness as the ideal place to live and to work. Of what value are our assets such as resort areas if we cannot get to them in a reasonable time? If, ultimately, the three-day week end prevails for workers, then the travel-time factor could diminish in importance.

But we are creatures who place great value on time. Time is money in our economic pattern. Therefore, we are placing increasing importance on how long it takes to move from place to place. It is a fad today among men to boast about the number of shaves they can get using a certain razor blade. What they are really saying is how much time and money they are saving.

Shortcuts Gone

Vanished are the days when we could boast about the new shortcut we found to go to a favorite resort or between work and home. Perhaps we thought we boasted to too many people because we soon found our shortcut no longer existed. The truth is that just

Christmas Day

By BLANCHE SHERRY

*Christmas Bells will soon be ringing
Christmas Carols, the Children singing
Tinsel'd Trees so shiny and bright
Colored lights that glow in the night
Christ was born on Christmas Day,
In a lonely Manger, far far away
On Christmas Day, we kneel in Prayer

the constant four to five per cent annual increase in motor vehicle registrations in the Commonwealth filled up our shortcut.

With vast missing links in our highway system in Boston and its metropolitan area, what should be alternate routes are presently traffic-strangled, obsolete and dangerous main arteries. It should be apparent to all of us that we have been less than alert in permitting the highway construction program to come to a halt in this area. Remember, the Master Highway Plan for the Boston metropolitan area has celebrated its fifteenth birthday. If we continue to remain silent and not let our state officials know our desires to complete our highways, then we can rule ourselves out as competition with other areas of the nation for business expansion and the development of new industries.

Indeed, a modern Paul Revere can never hope to spread the alarm, for there he sits astride his mount, filled with both despair and fumes, amidst a massive traffic jam.

In summary, I exhort you to actively support the dual program of completing the highway program and extending rapid transit to the suburbs.

Walkie-Talkie Part Of Construction Job Now

Those workmen you see down at the State Street Bank skyscraper site, who appear to be talking to themselves are really using walkie-talkie transmitter-receivers, which speed communications among the men in the field and the Gilbane Building Company office overlooking the site. Five such walkie-talkies are assigned to men in key jobs and locations around the site—all tuned in to a base station in the office. A modernized version of those used by the military during World War II, the walkie-talkies have a range of about 5 miles and require an FCC license to be operated. They're a virtual necessity on major construction jobs such as this.

Throngs Breaking All Records In Christmas Festival Attendance

A record-breaking number of people from all sections of New England are attending Boston's Christmas Festival.

One of the festival displays winning the admiration and delight of the children is "Toyland," located at Playland in the heart of the Common.

Outstanding among its many features is the huge doll house, containing a wide variety of dolls ranging from "babies" to the biggest and most beautiful.

In the center of the doll house is a smaller one filled with electrical puppets that provide a continuous day and night show for both the young and the old.

"Toyland" is filled with so many different types of toys and they are so evenly distributed about the huge area that its over-all appearance is not only that of a wonderful fantasy, but at first glance is most dazzling to both children and adults.

The children are so intrigued and interested in all of the phases of "Toyland" that they lead their adult escorts around and around the perimeter of the area until both are worn out with fatigue. The kiddies just don't want to leave.

Other animal guests which have joined the reindeer and Sicilian donkeys at Playland are four handsome sheep—two white and two coal black.

All visitors to Playland are requested by the festival officials to refrain from annoying the animals or feeding them. One thoughtless urchin last year almost drove one of the deer into a frenzy by painting his nose with a red lipstick and others made several of the deer ill by feeding them peanuts and other food.

The police detail at the Common has been requested by the Mayor's office to prohibit all vendors from selling on the Common at all times. Last Sunday while officers were not looking several pedlars were tempting both children and adults to feed the reindeer by selling them peanuts.

The daily Christmas music program at the chapel on the Common, near the crèche, continues to appeal in quality and quantity. Last week more than 30 leading Greater Boston church choirs and glee clubs presented programs of Christmas hymns and carols.

One of the biggest and most interesting programs scheduled was that of the Phillips Brooks House Association of Harvard College and 100 of their "friends." The organization is composed exclusively of Harvard-Radcliffe College students.

Arthur J. Hennessey, 67, of 1565 Centre street, Roslindale, a member of the Boston Police Department for 34 years until his retirement in November, 1961, died recently at the Veterans Administration Hospital, Jamaica Plain, after a brief illness.

During most of his police service he was attached to District 6, South Boston, as a clerk.

Mr. Hennessey was born in Roxbury and lived for nearly 35 years in Roslindale. He was an Army veteran of World War I and a member of the Holy Name Society of Holy Name Church, West Roxbury. He leaves his wife.

Mrs. Louise B. Castle, wife of Dr. William Castle, director of Thorndike Laboratory at City Hospital, has been appointed to the newly created Metropolitan Area Planning Commission by the Brookline Selectmen. Each community in the metropolitan area will have a representative on the Council.

Mrs. Castle is serving her second term as a member of the Brookline Selectmen.

significant and valuable from each one. There are also several side benefits to this gathering of essential knowledge and information for the decision-making process.

Over 4,000 cars a day have been removed from city streets as a result of the experiments—and it is now clear that much of the improved service will remain after the experimental phase has been completed.

In January, 1963, the service on the Boston & Maine was increased 70 per cent and fares decreased by a rough average of 30 per cent. The net effect was an increase of Boston & Maine passenger traffic by 25.7 per cent for the first seven months of the experiment—from January through July. Effective August 1, the Boston & Maine experiment was modified—so that the body of information could be even further increased. Frequency levels were maintained, the off-peak fares further decreased, and peak period commuter fares restored to the pre-experiment level of December, 1962. For the new commuters this represented an average fare increase of better than 40 per cent—probably nearer 50 per cent. Nevertheless in the second phase of the Boston & Maine experiment—confounding not only our critics, but also surprising ourselves—the passenger volume has increased by 33.4 per cent for the months of August, September, and October—the first three months of the second phase.

2,500 Cars Off Highways

Frankly, the professional and technical staff of the MTC are hopeful that the Boston & Maine experiment can be extended between 60 and 90 days beyond the now-scheduled termination date—January 4, 1964. Active negotiations are now being conducted along these lines with Boston & Maine officials. There are sufficient funds available within the Demonstration Project budget. Indeed, if the Boston & Maine experiment is not extended, then over $200,000 of the federal grant to the MTC must revert to the federal government.

These new passengers on the Boston & Maine—at 1.3 persons per car, the average established for this area—represent over 2,500 cars each day not jamming the highways and not adding to the congestion of Boston's busy streets. The people are coming, and in a greater number than before—but they are coming less by car and more by public transportation.

The charts distributed to you this morning also show that over eleven hundred more cars a day are now using the MTA parking lots on the rapid transit lines. As a result of the MTC-MTA reduced parking fee experiments, the MTA in October had a net increase in revenue of over $15,000—by carrying about 1,500 more people each way each day and by diverting over 1,100 cars each day from the busy city streets.

Bus Experiments

The MTC-MTA Outer Circumferential bus experiment has also definitely met a need—as has the improved bus service between North and South Stations through the heart of downtown Boston. A vastly improved and much more attractive MTA parking policy and bus service will be one of the bonuses of the MTC Demonstration Project after the experiments have been concluded.

Let me add that there will be lasting improvements in bus service in many cities and towns throughout the Commonwealth as the result of the MTC Demonstration Project. We have noted only some of the Boston area experimental results in our remarks today.

Senator Umana has touched upon the most difficult, as well as the most basic, problem—institutional limitations, including the arbitrary definition of the present rapid transit districts, both the MTA and the South Shore Transportation District. Clearly, this problem cannot be solved without the help of legislative leadership such as that being supplied by Senator Umana and his colleagues on the Recess Committee. This conferama today is one indication of the community leadership being supplied by Mayor

John F. Collins of Boston in our search for a way to overcome these institutional limitations.

Beyond MTA Boundaries

By holding several exploratory conversations with South Shore and other communities, Chairman William Fitzgerald of the MTA, who is a member of the MTC, has been doing his best to find some satisfactory way of extending the rapid transit service beyond the MTA district boundaries.

Another member of the MTC, Mike Gormley, of the MTA Car-men's Union, has also been working hard in a statesmanlike manner to extend the service. Mike Gormley has long understood that the maximum job security for his union members can best be achieved by maximum public utilization of existing public transportation facilities. As a member of the important Contracts Committee of the MTC he has been playing a vigorous role in sharpening our focus on the sheer necessity of improving and extending the service.

No one has been more insistent that a practical way be found to provide improved public transportation between Boston and the South Shore than Governor Peabody. With the assistance of Governor Peabody's executive leadership, an imaginative and yet realistic break-through of the arbitrary institutional barriers might be achieved.

Thanks to the very practical and effective leadership of Governor Peabody, Mayor Collins, Chairman William Fitzgerald, Mike Gormley, and others, including the very important assistance of legislative leaders such as Senator Umana, I firmly believe we are on the verge of finding a practical way of overcoming these institutional limitations.

The MTC Demonstration Project is highly successful. Some lasting improvements in public transportation service have been established. More important, we now know that it is within our power to do much more to strengthen our public transportation. The only question remaining is our ability to do what is within our power—whether we can actually take the further steps both necessary and possible.

The MTC is providing the tools to assist in the difficult decision-making areas outlined by Senator Umana. The rest is really up to the Governor, the General Court and, most important, to you the general public.

PACKAGED JOY—There are 200 gifts beautifully packaged here. They are going to 40 children at an orphanage in Lowell. They were made possible by the contributions of settlement workers of the Boston Welfare Department who have sort of adopted the orphanage each Christmas. Making a check before the shipment went out were (from left) Frances Blakeney, Mary Hurley, Ethyl Clancy, Eva Rindaldi, and Dolores DiMarzio. (Photo courtesy Record-American.)

Senator Umana . . .

The third basic problem is how to overcome the institutional handicaps that cripple the most effective use of existing public transportation facilities. In this third category are such matters as the possibility of extension of rapid transit facilities beyond the arbitrary and impractical boundaries of the MTA district to other communities within a well-defined Greater Boston region.

Back in December 1961, the Joint Special Legislative Recess Committee on Transportation—which I serve as chairman—together with the Mass Transportation Commission, recommended the speedy implementation of a $5.4 million MTC Demonstration Project, and also what has become the $4.8 million Boston Regional Planning Project.

Fin. Com. Praises New Architect Fee Policy

The Finance Commission, under date of December 12, addressed the following communication to Mayor Collins:

"The Finance Commission wishes to commend your Honor's action in promulgating a recent directive to all departments (Directive No. 20) on the subject of Architects' and Engineers' Fees, thereby correcting a situation which had been marked by a lack of firm and fair policy.

"This directive adopts the recommendation made by the Finance Commission in a report published by the Commission on June 25, 1963. That report pointed out that the basis of the per cent which becomes the architect's or engineer's eventual fee should be the final construction cost, not the estimated construction cost. When the estimated cost of construction is the basis of the architect's fee, instead of the final actual cost of construction, it is a gamble whether the city wins or loses. The Finance Commission had discovered several cases wherein the estimated cost of construction, instead of the final cost of construction, was the basis of the architect's fee.

The success of the MTC's Demonstration Project has already been acclaimed across the nation. Dr. Maloney, the Executive Director of the Commission—and incidentally the secretary of the Recess Committee—will review with you the results of this Demonstration Project.

20,000 Commuters Daily

The commuting railroads serving the Boston region now carry well over 20,000 people in each direction in each normal business day. If these commuter railroad services were allowed to be abandoned, then, if Boston were lucky, 16,000 more cars would be added to the already overcrowded city streets and highway approaches.

To obtain some perspective as to what this railroad service means, please recall that in all of the city of Boston there are only 8,000 metered parking spaces, or one half the number of additional parking spaces that would be needed to accommodate the present railroad passengers.

To put it another way, there has been one recent report which says that to provide one additional off-street parking space in the downtown area, an investment of approximately $3,000 per space is required. Therefore to accommodate these 16,000 additional cars an investment of something like $40-50 million in downtown facilities might be required.

High Priority

According to 1958 figures, 18.9 per cent of the total land area in the City of Boston is devoted to road and highway purposes. This is more than three times the per cent of land area now vacant and undeveloped (5.7%). This 18.9 per cent devoted to road and highway use is nearly double the total space now devoted to industrial use (9.8%) and is greater than the combined industrial and commercial use (9.8% + 5.2% = 15%).

The provision of well utilized public transportation facilities deserves as high a priority in considering the future of Boston as does urban renewal. Of course, if the rail service were to be abandoned or even allowed to be seriously curtailed, perhaps the city would not have an increase in traffic congestion—because the already existing traffic congestion would persuade many of the present railroad passengers not to bother to even try to come into the downtown area!

As anyone who now occasionally drives into Boston in the peak period can testify, the addition of 16,000 cars during the day would certainly add to the present traffic congestion and increase public clamor for even more highway construction and possibly even more river crossings. If additional highway facilities were built to accommodate just the additional 10,000 cars that then might come in the peak period, a series of new highway projects totaling more than the cost of the projected Inner Belt—or the Turnpike Extension now under construction—might become necessary.

Clearly the prime justification for the continuation of the improved Boston & Maine and New Haven rail service is not in providing accommodations for commuters as such, but rather in persuading the present commuters to continue to commute, but not by car.

Precarious Bus Lines

Members of the Massachusetts Legislature have long been aware of the precarious financial condition of the private bus companies. The MTC and Recess Committee reports on this subject echo earlier reports by other special legislative committees.

However we cannot long postpone providing some remedy to this situation. It is simply bad public policy to force the nearly one million senior Massachusetts citizens, between 65 years of age and older, and younger adolescents, between 11 and 18, to be confined to their own neighborhood or resort to some personal chauffeur service for lack of adequate public transportation services.

However, there are many cities and towns in this Commonwealth, some of them very near to Boston, that are now presently threatened with a complete loss of their only existing form of public transportation service—the privately owned local bus company. The justification for more equitable treatment of private bus companies is therefore not only on the same basis as the railroads—avoiding the alternative requirement of substantial new construction and maintenance expenditures—but, in my opinion, the prime justification is the more fundamental requirement that the preservation of adequate public transportation service is an essential element of modern American urban life.

MTA's Importance

While there is no easy solution for the first two problems, the third, that of overcoming existing organizational limitations, is probably the hardest problem of them all. Clearly the MTA is an extremely important and valuable asset for a healthy economic life, not only for the core portion of the Boston region but for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts as a whole. The Commonwealth cannot prosper and grow if its biggest urban area cannot share in this prosperity and growth. The MTA does render valuable local service. While patronage of the MTA has declined from over 433 million in 1946 to an estimated 170 million in 1963, the MTA still carries over 300,000 people each way each day. No one can seriously imagine that Boston could be prosperous if it were not for the continuation of this basic transportation service now accommodating 300,000 people each way each day!

A realistic definition of the Boston urban region would clearly include areas far beyond the 14 cities constituting the present limits of the MTA district. We are denied the most efficient public transportation service possible and available to us until we find a way of overcoming the widespread suspicion of, if not outright hostility to, the MTA. We must find a way of reshaping our fundamental institutions so that we can break the artificial barriers erected in the past and go on to a more efficient transportation service as soon as possible.

The Recess Committee has been continued, partially because there is still much basic spadework to be done before a firm, integrated policy recommendation along these lines can be determined. However, I assure you that together with the MTC, and especially in view of the results of the MTC's Demonstration Project, we will endeavor to develop precisely such a workable solution of our basic transportation problems for adoption early in the next session of the General Court.

Foundation For Bank Skyscraper Going In

That big hole in the ground at Franklin and Pearl streets has gone just about as deep as it will go. It's now down around 50 feet. From now on the construction of the State Street Bank Building will move apace. With a break from the weather the task of laying concrete for the footings, foundation mat and walls will proceed.

This massive phase of construction will continue through most of the winter. Incidentally, some footings go about 27 feet below the excavation, some 67 feet below street level. The foundation mat of reinforced concrete will be 6½ feet thick, use 6,500 cubic yards of concrete, and will take 8 to 10 weeks to place, if the weatherman cooperates.

OUT-OF-TOWN MEETINGS

Annual Convention of American Home Economics Association, held at Kansas City, Kansas, June 24-28, attended by Margaret A. Learson, Director, Department of Home Economics, School Department.

Fall Meeting of Association of Contributory Retirement Boards of Massachusetts held at Northampton, Massachusetts, October 15-16, attended by Thomas J. McGrimley, Retirement Board member, and Paul L. Carty, Secretary and Executive Officer, Boston Retirement Board.

Annual Meeting of Massachusetts Municipal Auditors and Accountants Association, held at South Egremont, Massachusetts, October 13-15, attended by Robert P. Cunningham and William P. McNeill, Budget Division.

Annual Conference of International Association of Fire Chiefs, held at Memphis, Tennessee, October 25-31, attended by Thomas J. Griffin, Fire Commissioner, and John E. Clougherty, Assistant Fire Chief in charge of Fire Prevention Division.

Division of Research, Baltimore, Maryland, Public Schools and the Division of Financial Services, Montgomery County Public Schools, Rockville, Maryland, November 13-16, attended by James W. Dailey, Manager, Data Processing, School Department.

Shopping Time

The following Circular Letter No. 19 was sent out by Mayor Collins to all department heads December 9:

"Gentlemen: You are hereby directed to grant one half day, without loss of pay, to employees in your department for Christmas shopping."

City Supplying Its Own Christmas Trees Now

Park Commissioner Martin F. Walsh reports that his department has set up Christmas trees in 30 centrally located business sections of the city as well as the big tree on Boston Common.

The main tree on the Common towers in the rear of the festival crèche scene. It was cut on city-owned property, saving the purchase and transport costs that would be entailed if the tree was acquired outside. Several smaller Christmas trees have also been set up on the Common.

Commissioner Walsh says that his department already is eyeing a big tree on city property which will be ready for the 1964 Christmas season.

Dr. and Mrs. Ahern

Dr. John J. Ahern, for many years a member of the staff of the Boston Sanatorium in Mattapan, perished with his wife in a fire which swept their Worcester home early on the morning of December 6.

Dr. Ahern was a retired captain in the U.S.N., and chief of staff of the Rutland Veterans Administration. He was 64. Mrs. Ahern was 60.

He was born in Charlestown and he graduated from Harvard College and Tufts Medical School.

The couple leaves a son, John J., Jr., of Bedford.

Dr. Ahern leaves four brothers, Francis X. of Tewksbury, Daniel G. of Cambridge, Frederick E. of Quincy, and Timothy S. Ahern of Erving; two sisters, Mrs. Ann Greelish of Bass River and Marion Ahern of Stoneham, and a cousin, John Ahern, a retired Boston police captain, who for many years headed the special service squad.

Mrs. Ahern leaves a sister Mrs. Esther Murphy of Allston.

Fires Plagued Ft. Hill District In Olden Days

On original, not filled, land, the site of the new State Street skyscraper was adjacent to the fort, built shortly after Boston was settled, on famed Fort Hill—a spot now marked by the High Street exit ramp. In the 1660s, small homes and shops with dirt lanes, cowpaths and ropewalks covered the area, but these were demolished in a fire in 1711. The fort remained. The 1750s saw the rise of magnificent homes with green lawns and fresh gardens along Franklin and High streets.

At the foot of Pearl street, a few steps from the site, was Griffin's Wharf, where on December 16, 1773, patriots held the famous Boston Tea Party. In 1840 the fort was torn down, and 27 years later the hill itself was leveled to fill the marsh and water of South Cove and provide room for today's Atlantic avenue.

A massive fire gutted the area in 1872, destroying 776 buildings and causing some $75 million damage (and these were 1872 prices, remember). In the wake of the fire rose commercial buildings which remained until Boston British Properties, Inc., razed them to construct the skyscraper which is now under way.

Ace Bailey and BCH's Dr. Munro Recalled

On December 12, 1933, a splendid young athlete was carried off the ice at Boston Garden, placed in an ambulance and sped over the road to Boston City Hospital. That night there began a battle for a human life that stretched well into the days and nights and even weeks that followed.

The young athlete never played professional hockey again.

However, his name will always be honored among the great exponents of the sport here in Boston; and beyond that the name of Boston City Hospital and one of its surgeons will always be honored by sports lovers in Toronto, Ontario.

Ace Bailey suffered a severe fracture of the skull that December night 30 years ago in a booming crash with Eddie Shore of the old Boston Bruins. His life was saved by a brilliant surgery performed by Dr. Munro, assisted by the late Dr. Martin Crotty.

The old story got a re-hash in the daily press recently when another Ace Bailey died in Canada and for a time became confused in identity with the old hockey star who is very much alive.

PART OF CAMBRIDGE STREET DISCONTINUED

Boston Proper

The Mayor and Public Improvement Commission have approved the discontinuance of a portion of Cambridge street, Boston Proper district, as a public highway, on the southwesterly side, between Somerset street and Stoddard street.

The project is described as follows:

The highway named Cambridge street is hereby discontinued as a public highway, on the southwesterly side, between Somerset street and Stoddard street.

Said Cambridge street as hereby discontinued is bounded:

Southwesterly by the southwesterly line of Cambridge street as it existed prior to this order, one hundred eleven and 66-100 feet; northeasterly by the northeasterly line of Cambridge street as hereby discontinued, one hundred ten and 04-100 feet; northwesterly by the northwesterly line of Cambridge street as hereby discontinued, fifteen and 07-100 feet, containing three hundred thirty-four square feet, more or less.

ACTION ON DAMAGES

Voted, That this commission determines that no person sustains damage in his estate by the making of the public improvement consisting of the discontinuance of a portion of Cambridge street, Boston Proper district, as a public highway, on the southwesterly side between Somerset street and Stoddard street, under an order of the commission of October 22, 1963, and awards no damages therefor.

Boston Redevelopment Authority, 334 square feet, nothing.

With only a local anesthetic I was fully conscious during my recent operation, and even able to watch some of the proceedings. I noticed four doctors keeping busy, plus a few nurses. One doctor was making notes as the head surgeon dictated. "This is like a business meeting," I said. "You seem to be the secretary; Dr. G. there is evidently the chairman, and I guess those two other fellows are vice presidents. But what am I?"

"You, Mr. McMillen," came the prompt answer, "are chairman of the finance committee!"

Gentlemen:

I transmit herewith: (1) a letter from the Boston Edison Company calling to attention its existing underground easements in part of the John J. Ryan, Jr. Playground at Sullivan square, Charlestown, and stressing its urgent need for like easements in an additional portion of that playground, (2) a communication from the Commissioner of Parks and Recreation notifying your Honorable Body of the Parks and Recreation Commission's determination that the lands involved, to the extent of the easements described, are no longer required for public purposes, and (3) an order authorizing the grant of such easements to the Boston Edison Company for not less than ten thousand dollars ($10,000).

As Edison's letter shows, Edison has a real need for easements in this additional land. Use of the land for playground purposes will not be adversely affected because all apparatus to be installed by Edison will be below the surface of the playground. The price Edison proposes is eminently fair, being substantially above the value reached by an appraiser engaged by the city and being also much higher than the six thousand dollars ($6,000) paid by Edison in 1950 for a similar easement in 34,071 square feet of upland and 5,145 square feet of flats in the same playground. I recommend, therefore, that at an early date your Honorable Body adopt the order transmitted herewith.

Respectfully,
JOHN F. COLLINS, Mayor.

Boston Edison Company,

November 6, 1963.

Hon. John F. Collins,
Mayor of Boston.

Dear Sir:

The economic growth of the greater Boston area requires that the facilities of the Boston Edison Company for the transmission and distribution of electric energy be constantly increased. In particular, the tremendous growth of the downtown Boston area, with its Prudential and Government Centers, requires additional power in large quantities. Much of this power will come from our Mystic Generating Station in Everett.

In May of 1942 the city granted to Boston Edison an easement in the John J. Ryan Jr. Playground for a cable tunnel and associated ducts, pipes, manholes, and cables. In August of 1950 the city further cooperated with Boston Edison Company in granting an additional easement to replace that taken by the Massachusetts Department of Public Works in connection with the Sullivan Square Underpass. The tunnel and the playground easements are now physically at capacity, and the additional lines can not be installed within their confines; nor can these lines be installed on the new Alford Street Bridge because it has a drawspan.

Hence, it is necessary for us to install these lines in a submarine crossing of the Mystic River, which must then continue through the Ryan Playground in a proposed easement 20 feet wide and adjacent to our present easement.

We realize that this area is dedicated to recreational purposes and wish to point out that this is an entirely underground installation, and the proposed easement does not involve the presently laid out playing fields. Only manhole covers will be visible, and these will be flush with the ground and securely fastened so that they can not be dislodged.

Considering the vital need for these lines and the complete lack of interference with the recreational use of the Ryan Playground, we sincerely hope that this proposed easement, for which Boston Edison Company is willing to pay a consideration of $10,000, will receive your Honor's approval as well as that of the Council.

Yours very truly,

GEORGE A. ORROK,

Vice-President, Engineering and Construction.

City of Boston,
Parks and Recreation Department,
November 7, 1963.

To his Honor the Mayor and the Honorable the City Council.

Govt. Center's Federal Building To Be Named In Honor of Martyred President J. F. Kennedy

The new $23 million Federal Office Building in Boston's Government Center will be named the John Fitzgerald Kennedy Building.

Announcement of the selection of the name was made at a joint conference in the office of Speaker John W. McCormack by the Speaker and Administrator Bernard L. Boutin of the General Services Administration, which is constructing the new building.

"I am very happy that this building will serve the public for generations and will be known in honor of and in memory of our late beloved president," McCormack said. "It will serve as a reminder for generations of our great president, John Fitzgerald Kennedy, and will always be an inspiration for dedicated service in the best interests of our country."

He added that Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy is pleased at the decision to name the building for her late husband.

Ground was broken July 8 this year for the twin-tower, $23 million building. The twin towers will rise 25 stories, while the main bulk of the building will be five stories tall.

When completed, in about two years, the building will accommodate about 4,000 employees of 20 governmental agencies operating in the Boston area.

Boutin said the building will be completed early in 1966.

To All Department Heads.

I have asked the staff of the Boston Redevelopment Authority to conduct an exploratory survey to determine service and storage requirements for each department. The need for maintenance and repair shops, vehicle and supply storage, and similar functions will be studied.

Mr. Rothermel and Mr. Stainton of the Redevelopment Authority have been assigned the responsibility of carrying out the survey. They will be contacting you shortly.

Your cooperation is respectfully requested.

'63 Field Day Returns Top Previous Records

Final report on the 1963 Mayor's Charity Field Day, filed with Mayor Collins, showed the Cleopatra portion of the festivities netted the charity fund $46,520.

Michael J. Pagliarulo, fund trustee, said the Fenway Park program and the Cleopatra premiere netted the fund approximately $100,000—a record for the annual Summer event.

Proceeds from the fund are used to purchase crutches, wheelchairs, hospital beds, teeth, hearing aids, etc., for needy families and individuals.

Peanut Vendors Given Heave-Ho On Common

Park Commissioner Martin F. Walsh formally requested the Boston Police Department to intensify efforts to bar pedlars of peanuts, popcorn, and toys from Boston Common during the Christmas Festival.

Commissioner Walsh expressed himself as "annoyed by the persistency of the vendors" and put police on notice that "the sale of merchandise of any character is absolutely forbidden on Boston Common."

Walsh also appealed to parents to maintain control of their children and themselves to the end that they "refrain from annoying or feeding the deer and other animals on display at Playland, so called, during the festival season."

Mayor Collins' Christmas Greeting

Following is Mayor John F. Collins' Christmas greeting to City of Boston employees:

To all city workers, I extend my most sincere wishes for a Christmas blessed with a full measure of joy and happiness for themselves, their families, and their loved ones.

Nearly two thousand years ago, angels brought to mankind a message of true joy and hope. In His birth man found the meaning of true joy and hope eternal.

Mrs. Collins joins me in extending to Bostonians everywhere the rich blessings of this season.

$70 Million Christmas Club Holdings In Mass.

An outpouring of nearly $160 million in extra cash for the holiday season accrued to New Englanders as a result of Christmas Club savings accounts in banks throughout the region, according to figures announced last month by the Christmas Club Corporation.

The exact figure for the six states was $159,790,073, compiled by 1,587,815 savers. This was an improvement of just under 2 per cent from last year's total of $156,746,057. The national total was $1,659,430,000 with 14 million participants.

The statistics by states: Massachusetts, 745,266 members, $70,394,511; Connecticut, 447,306 and $49,895,345; Rhode Island, 136,823 and $13,239,654; Maine, 119,455 and $10,666,242; New Hampshire, 85,558 and $9,416,825; and Vermont, 53,407 and $6,177,460.

The Christmas Club Corporation, delving further into the uses to be made of this money, found that 30 per cent would go for Christmas purchases, 42 per cent for savings and investment, 17 per cent for taxes, 5 per cent for year-end bills, 6 per cent miscellaneous.

Rep. Bulger Elected March 17 Chairman

State Representative William M. Bulger has been named chairman of South Boston's 1964 Evacuation Day Committee.

Bulger, a South Boston native, will direct all civic celebrations March 17, commemorating the British troop withdrawal from the city 188 years ago.

David P. Breadmore, new president of the South Boston Citizens' Association, made the designation. Suffolk Superior Criminal Court Clerk Edward V. Keating administered the president's oath.

Representative Bulger, in his second term in the House, is a graduate of Boston College and B.C. Law School.

He lives with his wife and three sons at 1596 Columbia road, South Boston.

MTA Expansion Necessary If So-Called Metropolitan Areas To Know Survival

Chairman William J. Fitzgerald of the MTA Board of Trustees and William R. McGrath, transportation coordinator of the Boston Redevelopment Authority, were panelists at the opening day sessions of the recent Boston Municipal Employees' Conferama.

Each presented challenging papers concerning transportation problems of the present and future.

Their papers follow:

By WILLIAM R. McGRATH
(BRA Transportation Coordinator)

If I were a commuter, and who isn't, I think I should like to know a little bit about the plans for my future also. Every day something like a million of us in the Boston metropolitan area get out of our beds and commute to some place of work and later commute home again. The only two things we know for sure is that sometimes it's awfully tough getting there and getting back, and as we see new homes being built across the landscape, we know there's going to be more and more of us.

To cheer ourselves up, as we sit on expressways designed for 60 m.p.h. but going nowhere at the moment, we read our morning paper. Here we learn that the railroads want to give up all commuter service, and who can blame them when they've got their money invested and can't make any income on it.

On some other page we read that the public cost of providing public transportation, tagged with the unfortunate misnomer "deficit," is going to be a little more this year than last year. So, while our bosses or wives wonder where we are, we wonder where we're going.

Well, mister commuter, we do have plans for your future. We believe we know or can learn the technical solutions to solve your problems and making it easier for you to travel back and forth. There are serious administrative and financial problems, however, and you must help us solve these. The first thing we all must do is stop deluding ourselves about the cost of commuting.

(Chairman, MTA Board of Trustees)

The past, present, and future have meshed and have caught up with mass transportation in Boston and many other core cities dotting the face of America.

The future was yesterday and the future is today and the luxuries of procrastination and delay can no longer be countenanced in metropolitan Boston's mass transportation picture.

Friends—I might easily have titled my talk, "Robert M. Jenney—visionary" because this gentleman pointed to the future of the MTA in graphic and dramatic fashion two years ago when his organization ran full-page advertisements in all of Boston's newspapers.

Curious Ads

They were curious ads. They were startling ads and those readers uninitiated in the complexities of mass transportation and urban sprawl must have given them a double take.

The ads, cleverly conceived and designed, promoted mass transportation and the reader surely must have asked himself: "Why is the purveyor of gasoline beating the drum for a competitor—mass transportation?"

Well, I suspect that the visionary Mr. Jenney long ago arrived at a simple conclusion. Doubtless he perceived that unless metropolitan Boston achieves a greater balance of transport, the autoist will not require a tankful of gas for the simple reason that he will not be going anywhere in this growing and stifling jungle of expressways and arteries.

Annual BCH Club's Party Pays Off In Child Patient Happiness At Christmas

Once a year the Social and Benefit Club, Inc., of Boston City Hospital, throws itself a real party. It asks all its friends to join. By the time the band gets around to playing "Good Night, Ladies," everybody's agreed. They've had a wonderful time.

Usually the party comes in the fall of the year. Usually it's held at Whiton Hall, Dorchester. Usually, a big roast beef dinner precedes the dancing. And usually it's the same band that gives out with the music for the dancers.

Sounds a bit on the routine side? Kind of get the idea that you go to one S.B.C. party and you've seen 'em all?

You are all wrong. Every party's different. Every one has an appeal all its own.

Only one thing's the same. That's the aftermath of the party. After paying out all the expenses President John J. Curley and his staff figure out the profits. They are really worth-while but the way the organization puts them to work makes the "take" a real pay off.

Every dime of the net goes to making some sick or ailing child happy. That's the whole idea of the party in the first place.

This year part of the proceeds was turned over to Miss Janet Thackeray, R.N., nursing administrator of the Children's Building at City Hospital, and Mrs. Edna Haddad, R.N., nursing administrator in the hospital's Shortell Building.

As in other hospitals, every effort is made to keep the number of child patients at a minimum when the Christmas holidays roll around. If it is at all possible surgical procedures are postponed. Doctors will stretch a point or two to make it possible for a child patient to go home for Christmas.

Those who find themselves hospitalized on the big day of the year are the immediate concern of Miss Thackeray—and of one thing you can be certain—no child at City Hospital is forgotten by Santa Claus on Christmas Day.

Ever since the pre-Salk polio epidemic in the mid-50s, victims have been coming to City Hospital's Shortell Unit for treatment. They are a special concern of Mrs. Haddad. Every Christmas she conducts a party for them. Today that's one of the hospital's most cherished traditions.

Aiding Miss Thackeray and Mrs. Haddad every year are all those who attend that fall party of the Social and Benefit Club. The club is made up of hospital workers—mostly concerned with maintenance and plant repair work.

They aren't closely associated with patient care—like the doctors and the nurses—but they know about sick children. That's why they make such a big thing out of their party every year.

This year after they had counted the net proceeds and given checks to Miss Thackeray and Mrs. Haddad, they found they had a bit left over. It was just enough to purchase a TV set. They bought the set. Then they presented it to Dr. Sydney R. Gellis, chief of pediatrics services at City Hospital. He will set it up in the new Children's 1 Ward of City Hospital.

You see, the Social and Benefit Club doesn't mind operating on an empty budget as long as no child is forgotten at City Hospital 'round Christmas time.

"Peace on Earth"

I

*Sound over all waters, reach out from all lands,
The chorus of voices, the clasping of hands;
Sing hymns that were sung by the stars of the morn,
Sing songs of the angels when Jesus was born!
With glad jubilations
Bring hope to the nations!
The dark night is ending and dawn has begun:
Rise, hope of the ages, arise like the sun,
All speech flow to music, all hearts beat as one!*

II

*Sing the bridal of nations! with chorals of love
Sing out the war-vulture and sing in the dove,
Till the hearts of the peoples keep time in accord,
And the voice of the world is the voice of the Lord!
Clasp hands of the nations
In strong gratulations:
The dark night is ending and dawn has begun;
Rise, hope of the ages, arise like the sun,
All speech flow to music, all hearts beat as one!*

III

*Blow, bugles of battle, the marches of peace;
East, west, north, and south let the long quarrel cease:
Sing the song of great joy that the angels began,
Sing of glory to God and of goodwill to man!
Hark! joining in chorus
The heavens bend o'er us!
The dark night is ending and dawn has begun:
Rise, hope of the ages, arise like the sun,
All speech flow to music, all hearts beat as one!*

Boston Called Worst Jaywalking City; Experts Urge Pedestrian Control Law To Save Life Loss

All-America Boston was awarded one dubious distinction it could well do without when the recent Boston City Employees' Conferama turned its attention to the matter of jaywalking.

Speakers declared that Boston is considered the worst major city in the nation in its addiction to this form of involuntary suicide. The moderator and two chief panelists on this phase of the conferama's study of over-all traffic and transportation problems—Executive Secretary Robert S. Kretschmar of the American Automobile Association; Chief Inspector Robert Brooks of the State Traffic Department, and James H. Fairclough, Jr., of Jordan Marsh Company, all were in agreement.

In addition to expressing their conviction that Bostonians are altogether too prone to cut across streets whenever the mood strikes them, they likewise opined that Boston could save many lives each year by adopting the permissive Pedestrian Safety Law.

Herewith the views of Mr. Kretschmar and Inspector Brooks on the subject are presented. Elsewhere in this issue will be found Mr. Fairclough's outline of how Boston pedestrians might be educated to forego death or maiming injury by adopting a few simple rules for getting to the opposite side of the street.

BY ROBERT S. KRETSCHMAR
(Executive Secretary, AAA)

As you crossed through Copley square this morning, did you hear the squeal of tires as a motorist jammed on his brakes to avoid hitting a jaywalking pedestrian? Or, did you hear the wail of an ambulance siren—a police car?

These are familiar sounds in Boston, where only last year 37 pedestrians were killed and 1,535 injured in traffic accidents. In other words, over one half of all persons killed in Boston traffic accidents last year were pedestrians.

Poorest Pedestrian Record

Boston, where jaywalking has been practiced since the Pilgrims landed, has the poorest record of our 12 largest cities. We have twice as many pedestrian deaths as comparable cities and over twice the national average.

Pedestrian deaths remain consistently high and pedestrian injuries have been steadily increasing here in Boston—from 1,240 in the year 1957 to 1,535 in 1962.

This, then is our problem—increasing numbers of our citizens being killed or injured on Boston streets each year. The pedestrian problem is everyone's problem, for everyone is a pedestrian at least part of the time.

BY ROBERT BROOKS
(Chief Inspector, State Traffic Department.)

One of the important functions of the Traffic Engineering Division of the Massachusetts Department of Public Works is the establishment of official standards for the uniform control and direction of traffic throughout Massachusetts. This responsibility, which is a requirement of statute law, also gives the department the power of approval over the traffic regulatory and directional activities of all municipalities. The requirement of uniformity applies not only to all traffic signals and other devices but also to the regulations which make such signals and devices legally enforceable against violators.

Control of the movements and operation of vehicles, and the safe crossings and use of highways by pedestrians in the "Megalopolis" is an excellent example of the necessity of uniform controls. The Greater Boston Metropolis which is in the northern portion of this "Megalopolis" is composed of some 30 municipalities and regulatory jurisdictions. These jurisdictions as they relate to traffic control in this area could be a City Council, a Board of Aldermen, a Traffic Commission, a Board of Selectmen, a Traffic Manager, the Commissioners

You Pay

You can't hide it; you can't avoid it, and so long as you try, you will not have an adequate system. You have the right to demand economy and efficiency, but when you go beyond that, what you don't pay for, you don't get.

Always bear this in mind when you're concerned about the land that is taken and the buildings removed for highways; when you worry about the taxes that are levied to help cover the cost of public transportation, when you join the reaction against commuter railroad or public transit requests for fare increases, and when you think about the seemingly enormous amounts of money involved to improve just a tiny segment of the transportation system. What you don't pay for, you don't get.

Commuter problems of today divide into two distinct groups. There are those commuters whose destinations are scattered all over the metropolitan area. There are the others whose destinations are concentrated in a small central area, of which downtown Boston is the core. The scattered commuters are the fastest growing group, but the concentrated area give all of us the most difficulty.

The scattered commuters are, and must be, served primarily by automobile, although some public transportation experiments along routes of concentration are under way. These movements are so diffuse that plans for the future are generally in the hands of any number of local communities and several state agencies. Minor improvements here and there, the specific state highway program now in execution for circumferential and innerbelt routes connected by radial express highways are the source of service for this type of commuter.

Plans for the future must include other arterial and circumferential street improvements if they are to be fully served. The current Boston Regional Plan Project will undoubtedly give us best guidance in this respect when it is completed.

Center Bound

The center bound commuter is indeed another problem. The increasing concentration as they approach the center makes this group most difficult to serve. It is a single fact that with the residential and working densities prevalent in the Boston area, these commuters cannot be served by anything less than a balance of highways and public transportation facilities.

The functions of the Boston Redevelopment Authority are uniquely suited to aiding in the solution of the problems of the center bound commuter. In the course of the development program for the New Boston, it is both possible and proper that redevelopment activity contribute its share to the improvement of transportation services.

There are several ways in which this can be accomplished.

One of our methods will be to make an excommuter out of many of you. It has been found in recent years that a sizeable number of you are tired of storm windows and Japanese beetles and are ready to come back to the central city. A growing market exists of those who want to live in the centralized apartments; redevelopment of close-in access makes realization of such apartment dwellings possible. For those the problem will be solved by elimination.

That Parking Spot

Many commuter problems at the very core of the city are related to the simple matter of circulating about the city streets trying to find a suitable place to park. Once again, the redevelopment projects can and will provide both the necessary land and financial support to create needed parking facilities. In the same vein, redevelopment projects in areas leading into the central city can help provide the means by which improved streets and highways are located and constructed.

A most important function is, and will be, coordination of the improvement of public transportation with the improvement of living conditions in various residential projects. The retention of high density close-in residential areas in new or rehabilitated dwelling units suitable to the area will simultaneously provide people with good living space in an area easily accessible to the center of Boston via public transportation and will provide the public transportation system with the users it requires to justify its existence.

From all the above, you may gather that we look forward to an increase in the concentration of persons commuting to or visiting downtown Boston. Presently, 570,000 persons do so daily and we believe it will grow to over 600,000 in the near future. It is fitting and proper that it should be our objective to encourage growth. It is not only a benefit to the City of Boston itself, but to the entire metropolitan area by maintaining a strong and viable core. Increased accessibility for commuters, which in turn will mean increased accessibility for all who would visit the core area, is a device designed to strengthen the entire area. The natural center of metropolitan Boston will be maintained and will be made accessible to you.

MTA's Future

What lies ahead for the MTA is not speculative or ill-defined or happenstance. It must be. We know the precise directions in which we must spread our wings.

It is no longer a case of shall we let the MTA grow; or shall we give them an extension here; or shall we permit them to wander outside the Authority's present periphery?

We, the Metropolitan Transit Authority, MUST grow or the Metropolitan Transit Authority will die a long and tortured death and if this demise is permitted to occur, then the MTA will take with it into a limbo of forgotten cities, your municipality and yours, and yours, and yours.

The chief engineer of the Metropolitan Transit Authority only 10 months ago, and before a similar audience as is meeting here today, described the MTA as a "neglected asset worth nearly one billion dollars."

I said that we know where we are going. I said that we know where we must go.

We must go into the South Shore, we must eventually extend to Reading even though the Legislature has given us the green light for the first leg of this extension to the Malden-Melrose line.

North, South, West

We must extend the Cambridge Subway to the Concord Turnpike at the Alewife Brook Parkway; we must, one day, get moving on the proposed Forest Hills-Readville Extension; we must extend the Huntington Avenue Subway; we must extend the Commonwealth Avenue Subway and convert the Highland Branch to true rapid transit; we must extend the Revere Rapid Transit Line.

These plans, expounded before, are now old hat. Anyone with a grain of intelligence, a familiarity with metropolitan Boston and a map showing the population densities of the area, can readily perceive what I have just told you.

I am convinced that the Massachusetts Legislature, frequently wise in its ways, is going to give us—and you—what we must have and what we must have soon.

Ironically, the future of the MTA does not depend on the MTA. The future of the MTA must be written by you and the Legislature. The latter is waiting for your mandate.

Basically, we are dealing not so much with the future of the MTA as we are dealing directly with your future.

Your business future must be a dismal one if the largest transportation system in this part of the country is callously permitted to wither on the vine.

Personal Stake

So, my friends, your stake in the MTA is, after all, a very personal one which behooves you to stand up and be counted. You must pass on the word to your municipal leaders.

You will be rebuffed from time to time—this is to be expected—and

Mayor Urges Support Of "Globe" Santa Fund

As a Globe "Santa Claus editor-for-the-day," Mayor Collins wrote the following appeal in behalf of this great Christmas charity appeal:

"It is a sincere and happy privilege to extend my most hearty wishes for the success of the 1963 Boston Globe Santa Fund. There is no way to measure the tremendous void in happiness that is filled each year by this great work.

"In a more perfect world there would be no poor—no underprivileged. In such a world no innocent child would know the bleakness of a forgotten Christmas Day. No widowed mother would be obliged to face a sad, fatherless family on Christmas morn, unable to explain why Christmas was not for them.

"The Boston Globe Santa Fund each year helps avert the tragedy imposed by a world too often inclined to forget. It is a work that deserves the support of all.

"I urge that support. I know that every contributor will find his own Christmas more blessed and happy because of that support."

when you hear the opposition sound off about retaining the charm of the status quo or keeping intact the aesthetic values of a community free of public transportation, simply say that charm and that kind of folderol is nice in its place but it hasn't any wheels and it won't get you downtown in a hurry.

The MTA has the talent, the personnel, and the experience to do the job.

And They Need Us

I am not going to say to these communities, almost within our reach, that we are not interested in you because you will come to us when desperation and the traffic jam to end all traffic jams sets in.

I say to these communities, we need you and you need us. Let's get together. Let's talk. Let's iron out our differences. Let's join hands.

It is inconceivable that we, all of us, persist in standing by, watching a new and vibrant "new Boston" emerge from the rubble while a major transportation system vital to sustained rebirth and growth is permitted to age and become creaky around the joints.

So I say to you—the future is not tomorrow. The future was yesterday. Now we must act—today.

Everybody's Problem

This problem of mass transportation is not peculiarly a Boston problem. It's a problem in New York, Chicago, Detroit, San Francisco, Los Angeles, and in many of the major centers abroad.

Many of these centers are facing up to this problem and acting with vision and dispatch.

Yet, how long must we treat it as a problem? Why must this situation go naggingly on and on and on? We must dispose of it. We must face up to it.

We must remove it from the public agenda titled: "Things we must do when we get around to it."

The metropolitan area is known far and wide for its culture; its refinement; its places of learning; its ventures and successes in the field of medicine.

Now let's add public transportation to this list of shining assets.

Cardinal Cushing To Visit City Hospital Patients On Christmas; Hails Excellent Chance To Serve

There'll be no meeting of the Boston City Hospital Board of Trustees next Wednesday. It's not a regular meeting day for the board. Besides it's Christmas.

However, the newest member of the board will be at the hospital. Richard Cardinal Cushing is the member.

On the occasion of his first meeting the other day he took the opportunity to express his thoughts about City Hospital—thoughts which were formulated in his boyhood and developed through a lifetime of observation.

The Cardinal said that he would not call at the hospital on Christmas as a trustee or even as a clergyman. He said he would visit the sick as a friend of the poor of all races and all creeds.

He'll carry with him for distribution to the patients and to hospital staff workers some 2,500 cards prepared by Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy in memory of her husband.

"If that isn't enough I can get more because she has promised me 10,000," he told those attending an informal reception in the Vose House of the hospital.

"There have been times when this hospital has been criticized. But any hospital can be criticized.

"I always had a kind word for this institution and I believe that the Boston City Hospital has the potential to become one of the greatest institutions of its kind in the United States.

"It has dedicated physicians who are outstanding, and who could go out anywhere and become wealthy if it were not for their dedication here.

"I particularly want to be connected with this institution because this is the hospital that treats the poor. I want to visit the poor. I will be here Christmas afternoon to visit as many of the poor and as many other patients as I can."

those over 65. Two thirds of the victims are over 45 years of age—but by far the greatest number killed are over 65. Women make better pedestrians than men with a surprising ratio of four men pedestrians killed for every woman.

Hours of darkness bring added hazards to pedestrians with lack of visibility the major factor. More than one third of the fatalities occur between the hours of 4 and 8 P.M. During winter months and bad weather, the figure increases. Saturday seems to be the most dangerous day, and December the most dangerous month.

Alcohol, too, is an important element in pedestrian fatalities. Thirty-seven per cent of all pedestrians killed are "under the influence," and this figure soars to 71 per cent on week ends and holidays.

Traffic accidents which involve pedestrians are much more likely to result in deaths. However, for each pedestrian killed, 40 are injured. As the Traffic Director of Detroit has pointed out: "the difference between a fatal injury pedestrian accident and an ordinary pedestrian injury accident is so minute as to defy detection, as one might be the other by only a small change in circumstances.

How Can We Improve

Pedestrian safety controls can save lives and prevent injuries, but until last year, Boston could not establish such controls. In fact, no Massachusetts city or town could. Now, however, a law is on the books enabling communities to adopt pedestrian safety regulations.

When these regulations are adopted in Boston, we believe a substantial reduction can be achieved in the city's accident rate—a saving of 20 lives and 500 injuries prevented each year in Boston!

In addition to saving lives and preventing injuries, pedestrian controls will bring other benefits. They will make Boston a more desirable place in which to shop, live, and work. They will enable traffic to flow more smoothly and will lessen traffic congestion. A reduction in pedestrian accidents should also be reflected in lowered automobile insurance costs which in Boston are among the highest in the nation.

Danger Spots

A surprisingly large number of pedestrians are killed in downtown business areas and in residential areas at the perimeter of the central business district. In Boston, the greatest cause of pedestrian accidents is crossing streets from between parked cars. The second, and almost-as-frequent cause is crossing between intersections at mid-block. The third is crossing diagonally at intersections. All of these causes could be virtually eliminated through effective pedestrian safety regulations.

It's difficult to draw a composite picture of the pedestrian who will become an accident statistic. However, reliable studies do indicate that the young and the old are the major victims. The 5- to 9-age group has a higher fatality rate than any other age group except

Who's At Fault

The main emphasis is on the pedestrian although education must certainly be directed at both pedestrian and motorist. In 70 per cent of all fatal pedestrian accidents, the pedestrian violated a traffic law or committed some unsafe act. In the remaining 30 per cent, the driver failed to yield the right of way to a pedestrian.

It is estimated that good pedestrian safety regulations, properly administered, can save 20 lives and prevent 500 injuries in Boston each year. This is another way of saying pedestrian controls can cut pedestrian accidents in half. This is no idle prediction. It is most sound and based upon the experience of other cities.

Here are some examples of reductions in pedestrian deaths in other cities following insti-

Welfare Dept. Aids Generous "Santas"

"We'd like to help. What can we do?"

If you happened to work at the Boston Welfare Department, you happened to know of the nature and source of the queries that come in around Christmas, you'd never again question the basic humanity of plain ordinary folk.

The queries came from individuals. They came from groups. The idea of all was the same. They wanted to make sure that no one would know a Christmas Day in Boston—forgotten and ignored.

They turned to the Welfare Department on the theory that the Welfare Department would know those whom Santa Claus might pass by.

The groups were many and diverse. They included the South Boston Girls' Club who entertained 25 children at its F Street headquarters; employees of the First National Bank of Boston who came to the Temporary Home for Women and Children with gifts and a program of activities for 40 children; and a group of workers from the Belvidere Street office of the Telephone Company, with plans to provide for 12 children from the South End area in which their office is located. Also planning parties at the Temporary Home were groups from the Arlington Street Church, Camp Fire Girls, Fitton High School, and Revere High School.

Coded Stockings

Directory Division employees from the State Street office of the Telephone Company came up with an unusual idea in Christmas giving. They asked the Welfare Department, to supply first names, ages, and sizes of over 200 children and attach this information to large holiday stockings. Then, each telephone worker assumes responsibility for filling a stocking. When full, they are returned to the Welfare office where names and addresses are matched to coded stockings and sent on their way for final distribution.

Many groups will "adopt" a family for Christmas by supplying them with food, clothing, and other necessities at the holiday season. Two groups from the State Street office of the Telephone Company, as well as the Emmanuel College Social Service Club are doing so this year.

Downtown Christmas Decorations Praised

Building and store owners in downtown Boston were lauded last week by Mayor John F. Collins for the colorful and artistic manner in which they have decorated their properties for Christmas.

Singled out for special laudations were the Jordan Marsh Company, Filene's, Gilchrist's, John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company, Boston Edison Company, Boston Gas Company, the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, and the New England Power Company.

All of these buildings in keeping with their custom of many years have adorned their structures with unusually artistic lighting for the entire Christmas season.

A 33-month study of New York's Pedestrian Safety Program shows a 12 per cent drop in the number of pedestrian accidents—a 17 per cent drop in the number of pedestrians killed—and a 12 per cent drop in the number of pedestrians injured—all within a period of less than three years.

Safety Controls Accepted

Although Boston, as early as 1925, used the basic idea of pedestrians crossing while all vehicular traffic stopped, we've been dragging our feet ever since. The jaywalking Bostonian has been the subject of all sorts of jokes and cartoons. Yet, instead of creating the image that we are humorous and quaint individualists, our lack of a pedestrian safety program has made us look ridiculous and behind the times.

Alert leaders in every major city in the United States and in most Canadian cities long ago recognized the need for pedestrian controls as necessary to a well-run community. Residents of these cities have accepted these safety regulations for their own protection and take them seriously.

Here are some examples of the length of time pedestrian controls have been in effect in other cities—Cincinnati since 1939; Los Angeles and the District of Columbia since 1941; Detroit since 1942; Portland, Oregon, and Seattle since 1945; Oakland, California, since 1946; Rochester, New York, since 1953, and Milwaukee since 1957.

Experience has proved that pedestrian laws not only can work but actually do work in other cities. There has never been an instance of a city wanting to repeal its pedestrian safety regulations. The only stumbling block for Boston is the attitude of those who say, "It can't be done here."

It not only can, it must be done here. It's time for the "New Boston" to take a new look at its pedestrian picture—and get its pedestrians in step with the times. A yearly saving of 20 lives and the prevention of injuries to 500 of our citizens is too important to be ignored!

of the Massachusetts Department of Public Works for State Highways, and the Commissioners of the MDC on MDC roadways. Picture if you can the resultant chaos within this relatively small geographical area if each rule-making body was free to set its own standards for traffic control signals, signs, pavement markings, and other traffic devices.

The concept of uniformity in regulations and devices does not mean that all controls on all aspects of traffic must be the same everywhere. Rather it means that situations similar in nature shall be treated similarly. As stated in the Uniform Vehicle Code, it is not inconsistent with the principle of uniformity that laws may provide special exceptions for those cases deserving special treatment.

Pedestrian Control

Pedestrian control within this metropolis presents many situations which will be repeated in almost every municipality. With this thought in mind we entered upon the field of pedestrian traffic control.

Pedestrian Control in Massachusetts was authorized by the Legislature in 1962. This enabling act provides for the adoption of pedestrian regulations by the local rule-making authority, after formal acceptance of the act by the city or town. It defines "pedestrian" and provides that regulations adopted are subject to the written approval of the Massachusetts Department of Public Works as is required for any traffic regulation. The law further provides penalties for the violation of the regulations and a penalty for the person who would refuse to identify himself to a police officer.

Since the department was charged with the duty of approving the pedestrian regulations, the first step necessary was the preparation of a model set of regulations which embodied all desirous and necessary types of Pedestrian Control. The regulations recommended by the department for approval by local authorities were compiled after lengthy study and research into the pedestrian problems and controls in use or recommended for use in other states. This information combined with the recommendations of the Uniform Traffic Ordinance which is issued by the National Committee on Uniform Traffic Laws and Ordinances resulted in the preparation and draft of a Model Pedestrian Control Regulation. Copies of the Model Regulation have been supplied to each municipality.

Pedestrian Rules

Some of the provisions of the Uniform Pedestrian Regulations are: that a person who wishes to cross a roadway must cross in a crosswalk if he is within three hundred feet of a marked crosswalk, and that an officer or a traffic signal at that crosswalk must be obeyed; they require that the person actuate the signal if necessary; they provide for a regulation prohibiting hitchhikers, and that where sidewalks are provided pedestrians must use them. Included in the regulations are vehicle operation rules which require the operator to yield to a pedestrian in a marked crosswalk. They also require that a stop made by one vehicle for pedestrians to cross must be honored by other vehicles traveling in the same direction.

Present traffic control signals where pedestrian protection is necessary contain signal indications of red and yellow shown simultaneously in all directions and are a legal indication that all motor vehicles must stop and remain stopped while the red-yellow indication is shown. Under the new system of control, the existing red-yellow indication requires the vehicles to stop as before and indicates to the pedestrians that they may then and only then legally cross within a crosswalk.

From a letter written by Mark Twain in the twilight of his career: "Twenty-four years ago, madam, I was incredibly handsome. The remains of it are still visible through the rifts of time. I was so handsome that women became spellbound when I came in view. In San Francisco, in rainy season, I was frequently mistaken for a cloudless day."

—Bennett Cerf

The regulations further provide that the pedestrian will cross only on a proper indication. Eventually, the red-yellow indication will be replaced by red for vehicles and "Walk" and "Don't Walk" for pedestrians.

Education Necessary

New standards for traffic control signals require illuminated word commands for pedestrians. The signal commands "Walk" or "Don't Walk" are to be used only where legally enforceable.

The success or failure of a Pedestrian Control Program will depend upon the success of the Educational Program adopted to present to the pedestrians, the nondriving pedestrian particularly, the message of safety through obedience to pedestrian regulations. Just as motorists must be educated to save their own lives and the lives of others, so must pedestrians. Control programs and the educational techniques employed must be tied in to the target date or effective date of the Pedestrian Control Regulations.

Through the cooperation of public agencies, the news publishing media, and through the all important television and radio public service editorials much can be accomplished by driving home at every opportunity two points:

1. Cross only at crosswalks.
2. Obey the commands of traffic control signals.

Experience in other areas of the country has proven that if the public is properly informed and with reasonable enforcement the pedestrian control program will succeed.

The success of the pedestrian program is dependent upon continuous and repetitive activity on the part of those charged with the educational and enforcement programs. This is the responsibility of the municipality. The effectiveness of the Pedestrian Control Program should be readily evident in the reduction of the ratio of pedestrian-vehicle accidents.

Boston Could Be Taught To Lose Jaywalking Habits in 12-Month Educational Campaign

BY JAMES H. FAIRCLOUGH, JR.
(Citizens' Traffic Advisory Committee Member)

The Mayor's Citizens' Traffic Advisory Committee became interested in this pedestrian safety legislation because it provided us with an opportunity to save lives and reduce accident hazards. Based upon the experience of other large cities such as Detroit, Washington, Cincinnati, Portland, Oregon, Seattle, and Milwaukee, we believe that as a result of this legislation and affirmative action by the City Council, there can be a reduction in pedestrian deaths and injuries amounting to about 50 per cent.

Applying this figure to the Boston rate would mean a saving of about 20 lives and the prevention of more than 500 injuries each year.

Boston Stands Alone

Possessing this information of tried and proven experience, can anyone in full sincerity say "This effort is a waste of time," or "an infringement upon the rights of an individual as a pedestrian to walk the streets as he pleases," or "this will never work out because the streets of Boston are too narrow"? Of course not because everyone wants to prevent the anguish and sadness caused by violent deaths and many times crippling accidents, necessitating long periods of hospitalization with very serious financial costs.

This is the price we pay because of a lack of proper pedestrian safeguards.

Boston is the only major city without effective pedestrian safety regulations in force.

We believe that a considerate and intelligent public informational and educational campaign of approximately one year's duration is necessary to change some of our walking habits before the time comes when the pedestrian safety regulations would be enforced.

Voluntary Compliance

We further believe that "Jaywalkers must be taught, not caught." People must not only understand the new regulations as they apply to them as pedestrians or motorists, but they must believe in the objectives of this law and be willing to cooperate and make successful this very humanitarian effort.

Pedestrian safety in our city relies in a great measure upon voluntary compliance. However, this can only come about if we have effectively encouraged people to adopt safe walking habits. We know that this will be no easy task, but with the use of "Walk—Don't Walk" lights, painted crosswalks, and other safety aids, we will save lives and reduce accidents.

Among these aids to safety we contemplate the use of pamphlets, posters, and police-manned loud-

Lots More People Lots More Phones

Personal income in Massachusetts will increase by more than 95 per cent and its population by 1.4 million between 1960 and 1980, according to a long-range study made by the New England Telephone and Telegraph Company.

Such a growth should be enough to push the total number of telephones to nearly 4.4 million, the study estimates. This would be a gain of more than 70 per cent over the 18-year span of the forecast.

In 1960, the last general census year, about 80 per cent of Massachusetts households had telephone service. This was a higher rate than that of the company's other four operating areas—Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, and Rhode Island—or the country as a whole. There was one residence extension for every 3½ home main telephone last year.

Growth in population and personal income in the five states is expected to be enough to push the total number of telephones close to the 6¼ million mark by 1980. Telephones in the five states now total 3.7 million.

speakers reminding both pedestrians and motorists of their responsibilities. We will work with school officials, principals, teachers, PTA groups, School Safety Patrols, and policemen and women because their assistance can be invaluable in promoting safe walking habits. We must reach the little tots and their big brothers and sisters so that we can prevent them from running out into the street while playing chase or running between parked cars in the pursuit of a ball if we are to prevent these horrible deaths and injuries.

Right here I would like to say that this program will start in small selected areas rather than attempting to apply it throughout the city all at one time. As it becomes effective in an area, it will fan out to other areas. However, because of the educational program, we expect that its benefits will be felt throughout Boston and our suburbs.

Pedestrian Safety Year

We shall attempt to get the cooperation of all media of communication. We must have very effective publicity. I know that we can count on our very capable Mayor Collins for his cooperation because he is sincerely and thoroughly behind this program. He is behind it because of his intense interest in people and their welfare. He believes that this pedestrian-safety program can and will save lives and reduce accidents.

We will ask his Honor to proclaim a "Pedestrian Safety Year." Further, we would like to have the Mayor, Traffic Commissioner Carty, our Police Commissioner Ed McNamara, and other city officials appear on TV and radio programs supporting this program.

We will need your cooperation and the cooperation of every right-thinking person in this community. We urge you to think about it; believe in it; talk about it. We want to prevent the deaths of approximately 100 people and the serious injuring of 2,500 people in Boston in the next five years. Other cities have done it, and I have enough confidence in the people of Boston to know that we can do it, too.

$125 Million Stamps For 3.5 Billion Cards

Caretakers of the nation's postal treasury can look forward to this Christmas of 1963, for it should bring a gross $125 million into the postal profit vaults. According to

Both Police and Fire Dept. Raises Studied

(Following was the statement of Mayor John F. Collins on December 16 re City Council action calling for increased pay for members of the Boston Police Department):

"I am fully cognizant of the contributions to the public welfare made by members of the Boston Police Department—and members of the Boston Fire Department as well.

"The city has endeavoured through wage increases, the most recent of which was in March of this year, plus fringe benefits, including Blue Cross-Blue Shield, and additional holiday pay and vacation allowances, to constantly improve the status of members of both departments.

"Since March, 1963, the question of additional compensation for police officers and fire fighters has been under active study and I will have a further statement within the next two weeks."

Rust Craft Greeting Cards, Inc., Dedham, Mass., that's the dollar worth of postage to be used this holiday season on Christmas cards and packages—enough postage to cover 350 acres.

The greatest proportion of these miles of stamps will be consumed by Christmas cards, by the 3.5 billion cards to circulate through the U. S. mails. This greeting card count should make the nation's harassed postal employees look back with idyllic wonder to Christmas, 1853. In that year exactly one Christmas salutation was sent in the U. S.

Although Yankee ingenuity did not initiate this now well-anchored American greeting custom, this trait was instrumental in propelling it from the single numbers to its present overwhelming count and in establishing some of the Christmas greeting modes.

The major New England contributor was one Louis Prang, a Boston lithographer on the lookout for profits, who in 1875 first launched the card on a commercial scope. Only five years later, in 1880, Prang was producing five million Christmas cards annually.

His favorite Christmas motif, strangely enough, was the Killarney rose. Other ranking favorites were spring flowers and harvest scenes. Though unlikely reflections of the Christmas season—especially here in New England—these illustrations, flanked with the words "Merry Christmas," sold the public on the seasonal greeting custom.

These commercial greetings also earned for Prang his desired pile of profits plus the title, "Father of the American Christmas card."

Another New England contribution to the Yule card custom was the "personalized" greeting—cards specially designed to be printed with the senders' names. This dates back to the days when the family coachman toured Beacon Hill in Boston, leaving his employer's engraved calling cards on the silver tray in the hallways of friends.

Rust Craft made a third mark on the posted Christmas salutation. In 1906, the company introduced the first "enveloped" Christmas card.

Possibly feeling some responsibility for the card container they introduced, the company gives a helpful bit of advice on addressing envelopes—be sure to include a return address. To give stimulus to this directive the company adds: In New York City alone, every year, six million Christmas cards pour into the Dead Letter Office.

General Galvin was described by General of the Armies George Marshall before Congress as "the outstanding reservist in the war." He was in the D-Day Invasion, the Battle of Bastogne, was Gen. George S. Patton's lead tank commander, and won a number of citations, including the Silver Star and Croix de Guerre.

He was national vice president of the Reserve Officers Association, president of the Massachusetts R.O.A., and was commander of the 94th Army Reserve Command Headquarters.

A native of Charlestown, he graduated from the Northeastern School of Finance. Later he earned a law degree and became a member of the Massachusetts Bar Association.

Formerly a member of the law firm of Herrick, Smith, Donald, Farley and Ketchum, his most recent position was associate for trustee affairs with the Massachusetts Hospital Association.

Oswald Loses Favor

Oswald street in the Mission Hill sector has lost appeal as the name for a street on which people want to live. A dozen families on the street have petitioned for a change of the name to the Boston Public Improvement Commission. Secretary Robert Mehegan of the Commission says a public hearing will be held in February. No opposition to the cancellation of the name has been recorded. The street runs between Calumet and Hillside streets.

James F. Fennelly

James F. Fennelly of 26 Museum road, Back Bay, retired principal account examiner in the City of Boston Auditing Department, died recently. He was 65.

A native of Haverhill, he was graduated from St. James High School and was a baseball player in the former New England league. He retired in 1959.

He was a Navy veteran of World War II and a member of Boston Sinclair Navy Post, American Legion.

He leaves two sisters, the Misses Agnes and Gertrude Fennelly.

'63 Vacation Business Up In New England

New England vacation-travel business climbed this past summer 2 per cent over the 1962 season, according to the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston. It was the best year recorded by the bank since such records were started in 1950.

All the states noted increases with the exception of Maine which remained level with the previous year's figure. Lodging places in the hotel and inn group, with a 3 per cent gain, fared slightly better than those in the tourist classification, which showed a 2 per cent increase.

A 4 per cent increase in Massachusetts hotels and inns was reported over 1962, though guest houses were only 1 per cent higher.

December 2.

Personnel Order No. 307.

Patrolmen William J. Kelley and Robert E. Dosch of District 14 are hereby commended for meritorious police duty and each is granted three days' additional vacation.

On November 2, 1963, at about 11.20 p.m., Patrolmen Kelley and Dosch in sector car "R" while stopped on Harvard avenue for a traffic light at Commonwealth avenue, Allston, were approached by Samuel Greenglass, of 44 Hackensack road, West Roxbury, and William Petrosch of 8 Oliva road, Brighton, both managers of the Macy Hi-Grade Liquor Store, 193 Harvard avenue, Allston. These men informed the officers that moments before when they were outside the store in the process of locking the front door, a male person came up to them and demanded they open the door, which they refused to do. This person reached in the direction of his belt and then fled the scene, running down an alley adjacent to 193 Harvard avenue. No gun was observed by these men and only a brief description of the subject was obtained.

Patrolmen Kelley and Dosch began an immediate search of the vicinity and when in front of 1223 Commonwealth avenue, they observed a male, who fitted the meager description given, seated in the rear of a taxicab. The officers approached the taxicab, one on each side of the vehicle. Patrolman Kelley opened the rear door and ordered the passenger out, who pointed a revolver at the patrolman and said, "Be careful." The officer slammed the door shut and went around to the other side of the vehicle, at the same time warning Patrolman Dosch and the operator of the taxicab this person was armed.

Patrolman Dosch positioned himself behind the left-hand side of the patrol car and Patrolman Kelley again ordered the man to get out of the taxicab, which he did with his gun in his hand and walked to the sidewalk. The officers shouted for him to "drop your gun," which he refused to do. When approximately 20 feet from Patrolman Kelley, this man turned and fired one shot in the direction of the officer, and then attempted to discharge a second shot. Patrolman Kelley and Dosch fired their service revolvers at the man who fell to the ground and a Smith & Wesson .38 special revolver fell from his hand and was recovered by the above officers.

The subject, later identified as William McIntyre, 31 years, married, of 109 Peterborough street, Boston, was taken to St. Elizabeth's Hospital in the 1400 ambulance, and upon examination by Dr. Thomas O'Connell was found to be suffering from gunshot wounds. He was placed on the Danger List.

An examination of the gun recovered by the police from William McIntyre disclosed the weapon had been taken from one George Phillips, a guard, employed at the Workingmens Co-operative Bank, 485 Washington street, Dorchester, by one of the persons responsible for holding up this bank on September 13, 1963.

Warrants were obtained at the Brighton District Court for the arrest of William McIntyre when he was sufficiently recovered to leave the hospital. On November 21, 1963, he was arraigned before Judge Charles J. Artesani and held for the grand jury in $25,000 bail.

A check with the Department of Probation revealed that this subject has a long criminal record.

The Police Commissioner is pleased to recognize the alertness and devotion to duty exemplified by Patrolmen Kelley and Dosch in the arrest of this criminal who, at great peril to themselves, subdued and took into custody an armed gunman who would have continued in his life of crime and possible serious injury or even death to some law-abiding citizen, if he was not apprehended at this time. The courage displayed by these officers is worthy of commendation.

Personnel Order No. 308.

A Board of Merit, consisting of Deputy Superintendents John T. Howland, Herbert F. Mulloney, Francis J. Hennessy, William J. Taylor, and William A. Bradley, has brought to the attention of the Police Commissioner the following outstanding cases in which police officers have distinguished themselves in the performance of their duty during the year 1963.

The Commissioner therefore makes the following awards:

THE WALTER SCOTT MEDAL FOR VALOR, A DEPARTMENT MEDAL OF HONOR, AND THE THOMAS F. SULLIVAN AWARD TO PATROLMAN ROBERT S. SKEHAN, DISTRICT 15.

On August 31, 1963, Patrolman Robert S. Skehan, while on street patrol duty, was informed that a Charlestown resident was wanted for the vicious murder of a young girl and was believed to be still in the area.

The wanted man was known to the officer who immediately proceeded to search for him in the places he was known to frequent. Patrolman Skehan made discreet inquiries through the neighborhood and later that evening received information that the suspect had been seen in the vicinity of Thompson square.

Patrolman Skehan approached the wanted man, who was armed with a large carving knife, and took him into custody. Suddenly the suspect broke away and ran down Main street. Patrolman Skehan, in pursuit, fired one warning shot and when the suspect failed to halt took aim and brought down the wanted criminal with a wound in his right hip.

The offender is now awaiting trial for murder in Suffolk Superior Court.

DEPARTMENT MEDALS OF HONOR AND THOMAS F. SULLIVAN AWARDS.

10, are hereby awarded a Department Medal of Honor for meritorious police duty performed on January 2, 1963.

On that afternoon an armed robbery was committed in a market in the Jamaica Plain district. Patrolmen Scott and Boccuzzi, assigned to cruising wagon duty, noticed the descriptions given of the wanted men on a radio alert and proceeded towards the general vicinity of the holdup.

On Terrace street in Roxbury they observed three men who answered the general description of the suspects. On being approached by the officers, the men ran towards New Heath street.

Patrolmen Scott and Boccuzzi alighted from the wagon and gave chase on foot. After a brief struggle the three men were arrested at gun point, on suspicion of armed robbery. An immediate search at the scene revealed that one of the suspects was armed with a fully loaded .45 caliber U. S.

Army automatic pistol and that they were still in possession of the proceeds of their recent robbery.

These criminals are now serving sentences in Walpole State Prison.

Patrolman John C. Collins, District 10, is hereby awarded a Department Medal of Honor for meritorious duty performed on April 6, 1963.

On that afternoon Patrolman Collins, while off duty, observed a small boy fully clothed, fall off a pier into the frigid waters of the South Boston Lagoon.

The boy was quickly caught up in a strong undercurrent but Patrolman Collins, with a complete disregard for his own safety, plunged off the pier and swam to his rescue. Patrolman Collins brought the boy to the surface and back to the pier where they were both assisted from the water by on-lookers. In the course of the rescue, Patrolman Collins sustained a severe laceration of his right leg which necessitated hospital treatment.

An 11-year-old South Boston boy owes his life to the courage and quick action of Patrolman Collins.

Patrolman Vincent B. Giannusa, Jr., Traffic Division, is hereby awarded a Department Medal of Honor for meritorious police duty performed on August 26, 1963.

On that afternoon Patrolman Giannusa, while directing traffic at the busy intersection of Summer and Washington streets, was notified of an armed robbery which had just been committed in a finance company office on Winter street.

Patrolman Giannusa, being familiar with the pattern of recent holdups in the area, went immediately to the lower level of the MTA Winter Street Station. A man answering the meager description given was about to board a subway train. Patrolman Giannusa, with drawn service revolver, approached the suspect, disarmed him of a pistol and placed him under arrest.

Investigation revealed that his prisoner was the much wanted "lunch hour bandit" who had perpetrated nine recent armed robberies in Boston, Cambridge, and Quincy and he is now awaiting trial.

Patrolman Francis V. Connolly, District 4, is hereby awarded a Department Medal of Honor for meritorious duty performed on September 8, 1963.

Just after midnight on that date Patrolman Connolly, while off duty and en route to his home, observed a man at the corner of Dartmouth and Harwich streets attempting to secrete what appeared to be a revolver in the waistband of his trousers.

Patrolman Connolly stopped his car, approached the man and identified himself as a police officer. The suspect immediately drew his revolver and aimed it at the officer. Patrolman Connolly, after a struggle, was able to disarm the man of a fully-loaded .32 caliber revolver and place him under arrest.

Investigation revealed that the prisoner had just burglarized a tavern in the vicinity and was still in possession of burglarious tools and the proceeds of his crime.

He was prosecuted and is now serving time in jail.

Patrolman John A. Sacco, District 9, is hereby awarded a Department Medal of Honor for meritorious duty performed on September 7, 1963.

On that night Patrolman Sacco responded to an emergency radio call to the intersection of Southampton street and Massachusetts avenue, where he observed a man perched on top of the metal framework of a gas storage tank more than 200 feet above the street.

Patrolman Sacco climbed the framework to where the man was balanced precariously and about to jump to his death. The officer pleaded with the man to descend to the platform below and was later joined in this endeavor by the Rev. Kenneth Murphy of Rescue, Inc. While the priest engaged the attention of the man, Patrolman Sacco, at the complete risk of his own safety, slowly climbed to the rear of the metal framework and coming from behind grasped the man securely and held him until he could be safely carried down by members of the Boston Fire Department.

The man, a former mental patient, was committed for treatment.

Eddie Acaro tells of a Westerner who entered an eight-year-old horse in a race at an Eastern track. Since the horse had had no previous races, he went off at odds of $0 to 1. But he galloped home first by several lengths. The stewards, naturally suspicious, called the owner in for questioning.

"How come you never raced this horse before?" they demanded. "After all you've had him for eight years."

"Well, to tell the truth," the Westerner said sheepishly, "we couldn't catch him until he was seven."

Finance Commission Urges Increase In Rentals From Faneuil Hall And Quincy Markets; Charges To BRA

The Finance Commission in a report to Mayor Collins urges that a study be made of rentals now being assessed for tenants of the Faneuil Hall and Quincy Markets with a view toward establishing a new schedule of rates.

The report which also concerned many other phases of an extensive recent survey made by the Commission was as follows:

The historic relationship between the City of Boston and the Faneuil Hall and Quincy Markets is well known. Less well known, however, is the financial and administrative relationship which has grown up over the years between the City and these institutions. The Finance Commission has made a study of some aspects of these relationships and herewith reports its findings, along with appropriate recommendations.

Upped 25 Per Cent in '47

1. The rental rates charges by the Faneuil Hall and Quincy Markets have remained unchanged since 1947. The increase granted at that time by the Mayor and City Council was 25 per cent. (See Appendix for Ordinance covering responsibility for setting rents.) The previous change in rates occurred in 1929 when the rentals were decreased by 35 per cent. In other words, the 1947 increase was not sufficient to bring the rentals back to the levels of 1929. Tenants of these municipally-owned markets are now paying 18.75 per cent less than they were in 1929.

This is not all. The change in the value of the dollar since 1929 must also be considered in evaluating this situation. According to the United States Department of Labor, the purchasing value of the dollar has dropped 44 per cent since that year.

2. One particular aspect of the rental situation which indicates the City is receiving much less revenue than could and should be the case is the rate charged for use of sidewalk space.

FINAL TOUCHES—Five extremely earnest youngsters in the city's Temporary Home on Chardon street, lavished their most artistic talents in preparing this tree for the Christmas holidays. The children were guests of parties sponsored particularly for them by employees of the First National Bank and the South Boston Girls Club.

Insurance Companies Offer Safety Guides

(The following paper concerned with the insurance companies' interest in safe vehicular traffic and transportation was one of the most important presented at the recent City Employees' Conferama.)

By CARL A. GERDEN

Supervisor, Motor Transport Fleet Service, Liberty Mutual Insurance Company

You have heard what responsible administrative departments are doing in an effort to improve highway safety in Massachusetts. As an insurance company representative, I should like to tell you some of the things our industry is doing to prevent highway accidents and reduce insurance premiums. Because this panel session is concerned with commercial fleets of trucks and taxis, the following remarks are limited to these operations.

Over the years, insurance companies have accumulated a great deal of information related to vehicle accident cause and prevention. The data has been used to develop basic safety programs for use by fleet operators we insure. The purpose, of course, is to prevent accidents and thereby protect lives, personal welfare, and property of all road users. A good safety record can also favorably influence the insurance premiums paid. There are several other important side benefits resulting from a good safety program: goods and services are delivered on time, customer relations are maintained, vehicle repair and maintenance costs are kept to a minimum, management-labor relations are enhanced, and the trucking or taxi company's public image is upgraded.

The insurance company acts in an advisory capacity in its relationship to our customers' fleet safety program. It can make recommendations, but cannot enforce safety requirements. The trucking and taxi company managements make their own decisions to accept or reject the recommendations. Many large insurance companies provide

Increase In Rentals . .

Haphazard Procedure

3. There appears to be no standardized, formal procedures for the renting out of vacancies by the Division of Markets. There is no prescribed plan of operation for making sure that such vacancies are made known to the widest possible number of potential tenants. When a vacancy occurs, news of it is expected to circularize informally through the trade and bring in prospective tenants.

4. The Boston Redevelopment Authority has been progressively taking over an increasing amount of office space on the second floor of the Quincy Market. This expansion has now reached the point where the BRA occupies more than 10,000 square feet of such office space. This is more than half the total amount of such space available. Furthermore, the BRA expects to expand its footage in this building during the coming years as its waterfront program develops.

The BRA has so far not paid the City any rents whatsoever for this space. If it were to do so, then the City, using the general rates which other second-floor tenants are paying, would be receiving in the vicinity of $20,000 a year from the BRA.

It appears that reimbursement for occupancy of these quarters is possible under the same authority by which the BRA has leased the quarters on the tenth and eleventh floors of City Hall Annex.

5. The personnel structure of the Division of Markets calls for the employment of a Superintendent, an Assistant Superintendent, a Head Clerk, one Custodian, and three Watchmen. However, with the recent acquisition of so much space by the Redevelopment Authority, with an attendant reduction in the number of other tenants, and with the expectation that the number of tenants will be reduced still more as the BRA continues to expand and other changes are made, the employment of two supervisory employees no longer seem necessary.

Land Use Patterns

The Finance Commission is aware of the fact that plans are in preparation which will change land use patterns in this area and could affect some of the occupancy of the Faneuil Hall Markets.

There will be an interval, however, and it may be a long one in which the adjustments contemplated by the recommendations in this report will have a chance to prove their value.

The prospect of distant change is not an adequate reason for perpetuating present inconsistencies and inadequacies.

Recommendations

With the foregoing in mind, the Finance Commission makes the following recommendations:

1. That an expert appraisal of the Markets' property and rentals be made to establish a basis for a new schedule for submission to the City Council.

2. That formal, standardized procedures be adopted by the Division of Markets for renting out vacancies and that these procedures embrace steps for making known to all potential tenants the availability of these vacancies. Such steps could include advertising in the City Record, written notification to interested trade associations, posting of notices of vacancies on the market premises, etc.

3. That efforts be made to obtain from the Boston Redevelopment Authority suitable reimbursement for the latter's present occupancy and its anticipated future expansion.

Appendix

The legal basis for the establishment of rents in Faneuil Hall and Quincy Market is found in the following ordinances:

Section 6 of Chapter 22 of Revised Ordinances of 1961 provides:

"The assistant commissioner of real property shall lease, from time to time, by instruments approved as to form by the corporation counsel and approved in writing by the mayor, the stalls, cellars, and second floor in Faneuil-hall market for terms of three years at the rents established by the city council and upon such other terms and conditions as may be approved by the corporation counsel and the mayor."

Section 4 of Chapter 1 provides:

"The words 'Faneuil-hall market' shall include the lower floors, porches, and cellar of the buildings called respectively 'Faneuil Hall' and 'Quincy Market'."

The rules and regulations of the Department of Public Works effective as of January 1, 1955, relating to the Storage, Sale, and Display of Merchandise in the Public Ways in the City of Boston, contains the following provision (Part II, Section 6, Paragraph a):

"For sidewalk area occupied for stands for the storage or sale of produce or similar merchandise, $2 per square foot per annum, except that within the area bounded by State street, Washington street, Washington Street North, Commercial street, and Atlantic avenue as shown on a plan on file in the Commissioner's office, $2.50 per square foot per annum."

B & M Commuters Get Service Reprieve; No Permanent Solution Of Problems

The Boston & Maine Railroad will continue its low-fare, high-frequency commuter service through March 21, it was announced by U. S. Senator Edward M. Kennedy's office.

The reprieve—an extension of the Mass. Transportation Commission's federal-state financed experiment—will not change the Boston & Maine's decision to petition the State Department of Public Utilities on January 4 to end all of its passenger operations in and out of Boston.

The railroad carries 14,000 or more commuters daily and last year handled 5,472,620 revenue passengers. Its passenger deficit for the first nine months of 1963 was $1,839,510 and, according to President Daniel A. Benson, would have been $3,209,250 without MTC assistance.

The decision came after four days of conference between the Housing and Home Finance Agency and Dr. Joseph T. Maloney, MTC executive director.

The experiment, which began last January 6 with a $2.2 million grant, was scheduled to end January 4, 1964.

The Boston & Maine had announced it would reduce the number of its Monday through Friday trains from 386 to 204 on January 5, a move it could take without DPU permission.

The latest decision maintains the present, subsidized fare structure and will, in fact, increase slightly the number of commuter trains on the Boston & Maine during the 11 weeks.

Rush-hour trains between Boston and Beverly will depart every 10 minutes, instead of the present 15.

Rush-hour service between Boston and South Acton, now on a 30-minute schedule, will be beefed up to 15 minutes. Off-peak service will be advanced from hourly to half-hourly runs.

Reduced service throughout the Boston & Maine system will be in effect, however, from January 4 through January 6, involving only one commuter day, to meet a legal technicality. During that period the trains will be cut from 386 to 204.

Governor Peabody explained that he had ended a stalemate which threatened the experimental service by obtaining an opinion from Attorney General Edward W. Brooke that state laws could be met if the MTC added trains were eliminated for the 3-day period.

Massachusetts law requires an 8-day transition period between schedule changes, and a 30-day period of public notice. Brooke ruled that three days would satisfy the law and DPU Chairman Norman Mason waived the 30-day period.

"The unavoidable inconveniences for Boston & Maine commuters have been kept to an absolute minimum, and the lesser train schedules will be in effect for only one business day," he said.

Senator Kennedy also disclosed that the Housing and Home Finance Agency, parent federal organization for the experiment, had authorized the continuation of another program involving bus transportation by the Eastern Massachusetts Street Railway Company, which serves 100 North Shore communities.

Dr. Maloney said the bus line was included to make comparative studies with the service provided by the Boston & Maine.

safety advisory services through staffs of safety engineers and specialists in specific fields such as driver-testing, driver-training, driver-education, vehicle maintenance, human maintenance through medical controls, and research. Safety services have developed in depth and quality since the early 1946's.

Mushrooming Fleets

Many trucking companies had mushroomed in size and operating area in the 1940's and early 1950's, and as a result of their growing pains, trucks did not get enough preventive maintenance attention. Serious accidents resulted from "mechanical failure." To help control this problem, insurance companies provided vehicle inspection service to inform their policyholder's management people of physically unsafe conditions found on their trucks.

No doubt, some potential accidents were prevented when the vehicles were repaired. Then, as good preventive maintenance programs were adopted by many truckers, equipment became safer and the safety emphasis shifted to accidents caused by "human fail-

The MTC's extension of subsidization of the Boston & Maine, however, will be irrevocably ended March 21, the date when federal supports ends. The extension is made possible with $300,000 of MTC funds, two-thirds federal, one-third state.

It has been proposed that the state defray subsidy costs without which the railroads will battle to drop passengers. A legislative committee headed by Senator Mario Umana (D-Boston) is studying the matter.

Meanwhile, the Boston & Maine's petition to end all commuter service will be going through the DPU mill. If it does not receive favorable action from the DPU within 120 days after January 6, the Boston & Maine can—and undoubtedly will—appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Latin School Grads Top MIT Dean's List

Boston Latin School officials were notified by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology that twelve of the school's graduates had achieved positions of honor on the Dean's list for undergraduate students for the spring term 1963.

Dean's List figures indicate that Latin School graduates comprise the largest percentage of honor students from secondary schools in this area.

ure," namely, the driver. Driver selection and training became more important. A significant number of companies had inadequate hiring standards and procedures, and found out later that a driver was either mentally, physically, or emotionally incapable of performing his job safely.

He could be a reckless driver, or behave irresponsibly toward his customers and the public. Insurance companies worked with their customers in developing standards which would match a man to his job requirements, and thus improve his chances of working and driving without accidents. Driver-training programs were developed to methodically teach a driver how to properly handle a truck or tractor-trailer rig. Safety meetings are being used to inform vehicle operators about safe-driving techniques, and how to anticipate and avoid accident-producing situations. Group discussions, films, posters, and other visual aids are used for this purpose.

Pinpoint Accidents

Accident analyses are made by insurance companies' safety engineers to identify and pinpoint the customers' accident problem, which may vary greatly among trucking companies. Corrective recommendations are submitted to management based on their own experience and needs.

Drivers, being human, can unknowingly develop bad driving habits which can be climaxed by a catastrophic accident. Consequently, we work with trucking and taxi companies, showing selected men how to re-train their own personnel in proper seeing habits and safe-driving practices.

We help our customers develop meaningful statistics which will identify problem locations, operations, routes, age-groups, etc.

In the field of research, the lessons learned from accidents are applied to help develop safer equipment. As an example, our company has designed two "Survival" cars; the "Backeye"—and we have a driver-simulator at Hopkinton, Massachusetts.

Safety promotions include participation in the national and various states' "Rodeos," where drivers compete in driving-skill problems, and knowledge of highway safety regulations and practices.

Our company has a special Fleet Management Safety Course which is held for customer management representatives across the country. The curriculum includes discussions on proper driver selection and training, human factors in accident prevention, controlling employee accidents, cargo loss control procedures and medical programs for health maintenance. A portion of the course is devoted to upgrading the enrollee's ability to communicate effectively with individuals and groups, especially in selling safety to their own personnel. Insurance company engineers make traffic control and parking studies for industrial and commercial establishments owned by our customers.

We are active participants in the National Safety Council, state and local safety organizations, courses given at several universities, and in safety associations comprised of various industries.

This brief summary, I hope, will give you some idea of the interest and activities of the insurance industry in highway safety.

Some Truck Tolls On Mystic Bridge Hiked

Increased toll charges for certain types of trucks using the Mystic River Bridge will go into effect January 1, the Massachusetts Port Authority announced.

However, the fee for cars will remain at 25 cents (15 cents with commuter stickers).

The toll for four-axle trucks will be hiked from 40 to 50 cents and five-axle trucks from 40 to 60 cents.

Tolls for all trucks under two-ton capacity will be increased by 5 cents to 25 cents. A truck, under two-ton capacity with a trailer will be assessed 30 cents. Trucks with single tires, but more than two tons in capacity will be charged 30 cents.

Many Advances Mark Hub Drive for Safety

BY BRUCE CAMPBELL

(Executive Vice President, State Safety Council)

In recent years Boston has made major strides toward traffic safety. This is true in the three basic fields of Engineering, Enforcement, and Education. Let me list a few of the accomplishments. The Boston Traffic Department has been changed from a department concerned only with traffic to a department with clear-cut authority over both traffic and parking. The Commissioner of Traffic and Parking now has exclusive authority to make rules and regulations, subject to review by the Traffic and Parking Commission, if necessary. He also has approval of site selection for off-street parking garages and is now the licensing authority for off-street open-air parking lots. These authorities had formerly been dispersed among the Traffic Commission, the Real Property Board, and the Building Superintendent.

Some of the major traffic engineering accomplishments include the installation of a new "Unit 2" traffic signal system to coordinate all traffic signals in the Back Bay area at a cost of $100,000. In the past two years, 202 one-way streets have been established, 21 intersections signalized, and 122 "Stop" streets established. Of the ten most dangerous locations, listed in previous years by the Massachusetts Safety Council, only Kenmore square has not had a major improvement. Even here, however, the signals were re-timed and the area will benefit from the extension of the Massachusetts Toll Road.

Tag-on-Car

In the field of police traffic supervision, a new system for processing accident records was established along with a control card system for recording traffic violations. The training of personnel has been stepped up with Deputy Superintendent John Bonner recently returning from a nine-month course at the Northwestern University Traffic Institute. The 8-9.30 A.M.

parking ban was a marked success. Boston has by far the highest per capita parking enforcement rate in the United States and the new Tag-On-Car Parking Ticket System has greatly simplified the work of the Police Department. The pedestrian enforcement law was passed by the Legislature although it has only been implemented by a few towns in the Commonwealth. Sixty women crossing guards were trained and assigned to school crossings with 120 additional to be trained.

In the field of education, the Boston School Department has continually received a Certificate of Achievement from the National Safety Council for its continued thorough school safety education program. A new Safety Procedures Manual has been published. The school safety patrols continue their effective work, and a complete school crossing survey was conducted with the Police and Traffic Departments. There is an annual Bicycle Safety Week program with bike clinics throughout the city. The M-1 Safety Car of the Boston Police Department cooperates with the School Department.

This is just a quick listing of some of the major developments in recent years to indicate that Boston is definitely on the move. However, it reminds me of the song we heard occasionally in my high school days, "You've come a long way from St. Louis but you still have a long way to go." This applies to Boston.

Control in New City Hall

Here are some of the things which still have to "go." The Traffic and Parking Department needs more men and more money. A new "Unit 1" will be installed to coordinate signals in the downtown area at a cost of $100,000. The control room will be in the new

The husband arrived home one evening to find his wife distraught. "I've had a terrible day," she complained. "The baby cut his first tooth; then he took his first step; then he fell down and cut his lip on the tooth."

"What happened next?" the husband asked.

"Then," she added in a shocked voice, "he said his first word!"

City Hall. Traffic signals must be modernized to the tune of close to $2 million. Dangerous locations must be continually improved and this means continually increased appropriations. The Inner Belt is needed, especially the extension of the Central Artery to parallel and relieve Massachusetts avenue which is, undoubtedly, the highest accident street in Massachusetts. More off-street parking facilities are needed in the downtown area. I am confident that these things will be done, but the fact remains that we need them today.

For traffic enforcement we need better accident data. This could be accomplished through a better accident reporting statute. Accident data is the key to selective enforcement. Boston, just like every other Massachusetts city, needs the Uniform Traffic Ticket System. This is the foundation for any traffic enforcement program. More in-service traffic training is needed including the training of accident investigation units.

To improve parking enforcement, higher fines are, undoubtedly, needed and the towing of illegally parked cars must be resumed. The pedestrian law must be implemented and enforced where necessary.

Boston, undoubtedly, could benefit from a separate traffic court which would hear all traffic violations. A Driver Improvement School should be established so that traffic violators can be improved rather than just penalized. Studies show that instruction is much more beneficial than license suspensions.

The missing link in Boston's school safety program is the lack of a Driver Education course in the high schools which includes behind-the-wheel training. I am convinced that we will not see such a program for 100 per cent of the Boston high school students or for the high school students in any other city until there is some type of financial aid from the state government.

We can summarize by saying that a great deal has been accomplished but that a great deal more remains to be done.

Hub Area Urged For Great NASA Space Electronics Center By Local Officials

Representatives of Massachusetts and particularly the metropolitan area on December 19 appeared before the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) in Washington to boost this area for the establishment of a great space electronics center.

A delegation of local officials, headed by Maj. Gen. James McCormack, president, Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce, expressed confidence as they came away from the capitol hearing. They left an 80-page brief which outlined many of the points verbally presented before the NASA committee.

Dr. George L. Simpson, NASA committee chairman, will convey the plans of Massachusetts, and other states' bids, for the electronics center to James Webb, NASA administrator. Mr. Webb will then transmit his recommendations from the testimony to the Joint Congressional Space Committee. The Congress may receive its committee's report by February 1, 1964, it was forecast.

Lawrence Levy, vice-president of corporate development, Raytheon Company, pointed out the fame of the Greater Boston complex of electronics and other industries along Route 128 is well known to German electronics officials.

General McCormack, who also is a vice-president of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, which has space contracts, characterized eastern Massachusetts as "without question, the leading electronics center in the country."

According to Bernard J. O'Keefe, executive vice-president of Edgerton, Germeshausen & Grier, Inc., the eastern Bay State section "is the one area in the country where the electronics research center might come where you can pick up a telephone and within the limits of a 10-cent call get all the talent you can use."

Ephron Catlin, senior vice-president, First National Bank of Boston, outlining the Boston financial setup, said the city's banks "have had to become research orientated with the area and adapt ourselves to a complicated range of problems."

JAMES E. GILDEA,
Collector-Treasurer of the City of Boston.

Dr. Earl Stevenson, official of Arthur D. Little, Inc., described the Greater Boston area as one "in which good science and good engineering flourish."

The Bay State's neighbor Connecticut, also presented arguments for location of the electronics center in that state. Delegations and officials from 22 other states also were heard.

Bay State officials feel confident about their bid inasmuch as NASA had originally recommended that the center be placed in the Boston area.

Congressional pressure caused withdrawal of Boston in the NASA recommendations, but the Congress ordered another survey by NASA to justify building the center and its proposed site.

Congress already has appropriated $3,500,000 for site acquisition and planning for the electronics center.

Plate Changing Time

All motorists are reminded that the final time for use of 1963 registration plates is midnight, December 31, if the car is not registered for 1964.

If the car is not registered for 1963, 1964 registration plates should not be attached until January 1.

If the vehicle is registered for both years, 1964 plates may be put on during the period from noon, December 31, to noon, January 1, however, evidence of registration for both years must be carried in the vehicle during the change-over period.

Governor Peabody and Registrar Lawton joined in asking service stations and garages throughout the state to remain open as long as possible during the change-over period.

Senior citizens and handicapped motorists are also urged to make arrangements now for the changing of number plates.

Motorists are further reminded that a few drops of penetrating oil placed now on nuts and bolts will facilitate their being taken off later. Such penetrating oil is available at garages and filling stations throughout the state. For those motorists unable to secure penetrating oil, it is suggested that they try to purchase a can of some other inexpensive oil that can be used on the day when license plates are taken off.

In response to many requests that the 24 hours for the change be expanded in future years, Governor Peabody has directed Paul Levenson, Executive Director of the Governor's Highway Safety Committee, to conduct a study of whether such a proposal should be included in the Governor's 1964 highway safety message.

TAX BITES

Income taxes often transform nest eggs into goose eggs (Shannon Fife in The Saturday Evening Post)....April 15 is the day when many a patriotic American feels blue-white and blue (Anna Herbert in Successful Farming Magazine)....Little things count, and three of them give you an $1,800 tax exemption (Banking)....The unkindest cut of all is Uncle Sam's (Francis H. Bishop in The Saturday Evening Post)

Mayor's Field Day Made It Happy Day

Thousands of Bostonians enjoyed a bright Christmas thanks to Mayor John F. Collins' Charity Field Day funds.

More than 1,500 Christmas baskets were provided for needy families throughout the city. Turkeys and vegetables and all the fixings were furnished to feed 500 unfortunate men at the 12th Step House, 23 Dover street.

Tons of candy, including chocolates, peppermint sticks, peanuts, and popcorn were sent out to children's homes throughout the city. Among the recipients were Kennedy Memorial for Crippled Children in Brighton; the Nazareth School in Jamaica Plain, and the Home for Jewish Children. Fifty pounds of lollypops were sent to the firehouse on Cummins and American Legion Highways. The "pops" are given to the youngsters who go to the firehouse and talk to Santa who listens to their requests as he sits on the station roof.

The Mayor's Charity Field Day fund has also provided financial grants for gifts to inmates at penal institutions and to charitable institutions. All in all the total cost of the 1963 Christmas program was $15,000. Michael J. Pagliarulo, trustee for the Mayor's Charity Fund, administered the program.

Holiday Season Can Bring Real Tragedy

Registrar James R. Lawton wished all Massachusetts motorists season's greetings, with the hope that the joy and merriment of the season would not interfere with safe driving during the holiday period.

During the 11-day period, December 20 to December 31, 1962, 33 men, women, and children lost their lives in motor vehicle accidents.

"I think we have made definite progress for highway safety this year, and I believe that we can carry this progress through the Christmas season," he said.

Registrar Lawton pointed out that the fatality statistics for the state at the beginning of September—when the last semi-annual inspection began—showed 35 more deaths than for the same period in 1962. As of December 20, the state had two fewer deaths than in 1962.
